John L. Sullivan, the veteran pug, says: Luther McCarty, 21, champion heavyweight prize fighter of the world—a sacrifice to the greed and avarice of boxing promoters.

I do not mean to attack the promoters of this particular fight, but promoters in general of the whole past decade. It has been simply the gradually increasing money-grabbing tactics of the promoters which has finally resulted in this fatality.

Luther McCarty would be alive today if promoters gave fighters, the public and themselves a square deal. But they will keep right on and many promising boys will be offered up on the same rotten altar as McCarty—unless stringent laws are enacted in every state providing compulsory physical examination. Every fighter should be examined several times a week during his training and again immediately before the fight. Then if a boxer were unfit physically it would be discovered before the fight.

McCarty was not examined regularly during his training by reputable physicians. The result—a life snuffed out, Arthur Pelkey, his opponent, arrested, knowing his blow brought on death, and a money-paying public given the 'privilege' of witnessing a murder, even though unintentional and unpremeditated.

Arthur Pelkey is in no way to blame for the tragedy. He was given no information that his opponent was not in perfect physical condition.

If such a thing as poor condition is discovered in a boxer, he should not be allowed to fight—despite the loss of dollars.

A MAN OF TITLES

The Duke of Atholl is about the most titled nobleman in the United Kingdom. He possesses no less than nineteen, and in addition is co-heir to five other baronies. The Duke's principal seat is Blair Athol, Scotland. In Gaelic the word Athol means "plain of the pleasant land," and the word well describes the surrounding country. The family is an ancient one, and cherishes many old customs, chief of which is that whenever the Sovereign visits Blair Athol, the Duke of Atholl must present to him on bended knee a white rose.

The Duke is head of a corps termed the Atholl Highlanders, which consists of 320 clansmen. It is a relic of feudal times, when bodyguards were common and the Dukes of Atholl are privileged to maintain this corps at the present day.

The present Duke served in the Scots Fusilier Guards, and attained the rank of captain. He is now Hon. Colonel of the Black Watch, and Lord-Lieutenant of the Country of Perth, having occupied the latter position since 1878. The Duke is one of the largest landowners in Great Britain, and lords it over 202,000 acres. There is no question as to the succession, for the Duke has a family of three sons and three daughters.

IN NICK OF TIME

Two Airmen Stranded in the Mountains Narrowly Escape Being Strung Up.

BY GERTRUDE MARY [illegible]

"I'm afraid that [illegible] sister of yours will never see my [illegible] vaunted trophy," said [illegible], airman.

"She's got to. I [illegible] her. I wrote her all about [illegible] and you. So brace up, old man. [illegible] your pick. The long stick—[illegible]. The short stick—east. Choose!"

It was an impressive [illegible] and an unusual one. Upon [illegible] plateau in the heart of the [illegible] Carolina mountains rested the [illegible] Victor. The two expert [illegible] men had just carried off the honors in an aero meet at Savannah. They designed a trip to the home of Nelson Barton, in Delaware, where his father and his sister awaited them. Now, in a flight over a desolate, well nigh uninhabited country, the "juice" had given out in the carburetor and the Victor was "stalled." Gasoline must be found or the machine abandoned.

After a brief consultation the two men had decided to start out in search of some town. Barton hid all but the ends of two twigs in his hand. Moore drew the long one—south. Barton started east with the laughing boast that he would be back first with the needful fuel for the engine.

It was nightfall when Barton toiled slowly down a winding valley—lost. All that day he had not come across a single human being or habitation.

"This is getting pretty desperate," decided Barton. "I cannot hope to find my way back to the airship. I may wander for days without coming to a town or settlement. Ah, at last—a light."

He traced it to a rude hut. But though he knocked repeatedly at the door and rapped on the windows, no one responded. Suddenly loud shouts and then shots in the distance attracted his attention. Following the same a great lurid glow sprang up across the eastern horizon.

A Vivid Picture Halted, Appalled Him

"A fire!" exclaimed Barton, and he started toward it. A terrific hubbub increased as he advanced. He had progressed to where he could see the flames through the trees, when coming rushing towards him, uttering terrified moans, he made out a pale-faced, wild eyed woman.

She clasped a little babe close to her breast, and holding her by the hand dragged a little girl sobbing pitifully with fright and weariness.

"My good woman," spoke Barton, stepping directly in the path of the flying fugitive, "what is the trouble?"

She gave a shriek at being so startlingly challenged. Then: "It is a stranger? Oh, sir, we are lost! The Dollivars are making a raid. They have burned four of our houses. They will be to ours next, and probably kill us if they discover us."

"The Dollivars?" repeated Barton vaguely, and then a quick memory of the desperate doings in these lonely Carolina mountain fastnesses came to him, and he asked: "You mean a family feud?"

"Just that," nodded the woman. "Oh, hide us quickly! They are coming this way."

Barton got the three refugees into a copse and saw a party of a dozen rough men armed and carrying torches pass them by. Then there were more shots and shouts and a new lurid glare crossed the sky.

"It is our home," mourned the woman. "And they will search for me and my little ones. I can run with the baby, but I cannot carry the little girl, too. Oh, sir, help us."

"I'll try, at least," announced Barton firmly, roused by sympathy for the poor creatures.

"My husband and his band are in a refuge camp twenty miles south of here," explained the woman. "The Dollivars have taken advantage of their absence. I must reach them and tell of what is going on."

The woman carrying the babe and leading the way, Barton with the little girl in his arms, they started on a forlorn tramp.

"We are almost there," announced the woman nearly four hours later as they started down a tortuous gap in the mountains. "There is the glow of their camp fire. Oh, I am so glad, so thankful to you." And then with the words she sank to the grass and swooned dead away. Barton placed the babe in a safe position in its blanket, and told the little girl to stay there and watch her mother.

Twenty steps brought the aviator in full view of the outlaw camp. A vivid picture halted, appalled him. A group of men were gathered near a camp fire, and over a branch of a great tree close at hand ran a rope. One end encircled the neck of a man with arms and feet tightly bound.

"Why! Why! Why!" shouted out Nelson Barton in three tones of rising horror, "it is my friend, my partner. Elwyn Moore! Stop! Stop!" he screamed, rushing forward and waving his arms wildly.

Half a dozen rifles covered him in an instant, but he never halted. Straight up to the outlaw leader he dashed.

"What's this?" fiercely challenged that person, keen suspicion in his swarthy face.

"This is my friend," proceeded Barton, pointing to Moore.

"Oh, maybe you're another detective, eh?" demanded the outlaw.

"Detective? Why, we are airmen."

"And found a new way to sneak into our district where we shoot strangers on sight? Here, boys, tie this one, too!"

Suddenly the outlaw turned. The little girl had followed Barton. Now, arms outstretched, she came into view.

"Mary, little Mary!" gasped the outlaw. "How did you come here?"

"I brought her," said Barton quickly; "your wife and baby, too. They are back near the spring. The Dollivers have raided your homes, and—"

A cry of rage went up from the rough crowd. The strangers were for a moment forgotten. The woman and babe were brought into the camp. Then there were rapid explanations. Half of the men sprang to their horses, and with direful threats swept north to add another sanguinary chapter to the great Dolliver family feud.

The outlaw chieftain came back to the camp fire with tears in his eyes, and gentle as a lamb. Instantly Moore was released. He overwhelmed Barton with thanks. He learned the real mission of the aviators in that forbidden district.

"Four of you," he shouted to his men, "get to Shelbyville fast as you can, and bring back fifty gallons of gasoline. If the town is asleep, shoot it up. Be back by daylight. These friends of ours must be back to their airship and the rest of us on the trail of the Dollivers."

"Ask him to give me my trophy," whispered Moore to his friend.

"Your trophy?"

"Yes, see it's been a target fastened to that tree yonder. These illiterate fellows can't read, and insisted that the badge was that of a secret service detective."

The trophy, plus one deep bullet dent, was returned to its owner with apologies.

The airship made a brilliant non-stop flight, almost beating the record. A guest at the Barton home, Elwyn Moore had the coveted chance to present himself and his trophy to pretty Mabel Barton.

She admired it, and its owner as well. The result was natural. The trophy became a family heirloom. It was not only a reminder of the skill of its owner, but of that weird hour in the moonshiner's camp when the loyal Nelson Barton arrived "just in time!"

GAMBLER TO A MILLIONAIRE

Wonderful Rise of a Nevada Man Who Broke "The Bank" With Senator's Money.

From a gambler to a millionaire mining man, politician, probable president of four banks, and on record as having refused a United States senatorship is the brief history of George Wingfield, according to the New York Tribune.

The story which was current in the early days of the Tonopah and Goldfield district was that Wingfield in the pioneer period of the Tonopah camp came out of a gambling house one evening and stood with a despondent look on his face, when the late Senator Nixon came along. The senator greeted George, as he was popularly known, and asked how his luck was. Wingfield replied that he was broke. Nixon handed him some gold and said:

"Try again, George," and passed on.

That money turned the trend of fortune and Wingfield broke the bank and became owner of the gambling house. From that time on his success seemed to be assured. He secured from the prospectors various mining claims, including large interests in the leading mines in the Goldfield district, and as evidence of his appreciation for the help of Nixon he gave the late senator an interest in all his holdings.

After the senator's death Wingfield was offered the Nevada senatorial toga, but he refused it. It is stated, however, that he will be the next president of the banks which Senator Nixon headed, Winnemucca, Carson, Reno and Tonopah.

Signs of the Times.

"There is every indication that hard times are approaching," said Mayor Shank. "I married two couples in one day, and there are a large number of auction sales these days. Two of the surest signs that hard times are coming are a large number of weddings and auction sales. Hard times make my business (auctioneer) good. When times are hard there are lots of sales, and of course I get my commission."—Indianapolis News.

Smallest Beast of Prey.

The smallest carnivorous animal in the world is an American weasel which is numerous in northwest Canada and Alaska and is occasionally seen about the Great Lakes. Although the animal turns white in the north in winter, it does not show the black-tipped tail which characterizes an ermine pelt, and so it is not sought by trappers and fur traders. This fact, with its small size and secretive life, has made its habits very little known. It feeds on insects, which it finds alive in summer and in winter digs out of rotten logs; upon small birds, etc., but lives mainly upon mice. These it can follow into their narrowest holes and runways, for it is scarcely larger than a field mouse itself; or, striking the trail of one, it will trace all its wanderings and as soon as it catches sight of its prey it will spring after it with amazing and fatal rapidity.—Harper's Weekly.

TWO SEA BASS HOOKED WHEN MASTER'S AWAY

Staten Island, N.Y., Man Ties Lines To Pet's Collar and Read What Happened

New York, June 3.—When John Elliott left De Hart's dock, Mariner Harbor, S.I., yesterday to get a drink of buttermilk, he tied his two fishing lines to the collar of his bull terrier, and hitched the terrier to the string-piece.

When he came back the dog was gone. He whistled and got a muffled bark in response. He looked over the edge of the dock and saw the dog swimming with two sea bass in tow, one hooked on either line. Elliott got into a boat, rescued the dog and retrieved the fish.

GREEN, NEGROCK. P., IS SAFE IN ORLEANS

New Orleans, June 3.—S. W. Green supreme chancellor of the negro Knights of Pythias, arrived here after an interesting trip from Jacksonville, Fla. Green is the negro who was taken from a train at Milton, Fla., Monday night and, had it not been for the courage and strategic maneouvering of the sheriff of that place, he might have been violently dealt with by the mob.

Soon after he got to New Orleans, Green prepared a long statement explaining tge incident and gave it to the newspapers.

"It has been my custom," says Green, "when having long distances to travel with a lot of work to do to try to conserve my health with every convenience that I could obtain under the law. In order to avoid any appearance of opposing public sentiment I got a drawing-room from Jacksonville to New Orleans and kept the door closed all the time.

"I was told by the conductor when we arrived at River Junction that sentiment at that place was decidedly against my occupying the drawing room, though he admitted that I was fully within my rights. I then went into the day coach for negries in hopes of avoiding trouble.

"At Milton some one claiming to have a warrant for my arrest, boarded the train with a crowd of men, and as I left the car with him the train pulled out. When the crowd learned my position and the duties I had to perform they seemed somewhat appeased. I was placed in jail. Next morning a justice of the peace fined me $25 for violating the Jim Crow law.

"I wish to speak of the kind treatment accorded me by the sheriff, Mr. Harvell, and his deputy. I have frequently occupied Pullman drawing-rooms while going to and from Jacksonville over the same road. The trouble seemed to start when the train conductor asked I got possession of the ticket for the berth. It seems that some one among the train crew had inflamed public sentiment against me. I wish to thank The Daily States for its kind and humane mention of the occurrence."

Green is head of the negro Knights of Pythias for North America, South America, Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia.

ROYAL BUSINESS MEN

Not a few of the rulers of the Old World are prosperous business men. The most conspicuous example is the Kaiser, who includes among his interests a porcelain factory. The general conduct of it is based upon rules and regulations laid down by the Emperor himself.

Indeed, it is said the Emperor is not above engaging employes himself, adjusting their wages, and even designing certain of the wares turned out. The Emperor is a model employer, anxious as to the comfort of his men, who have been provided with cottages and pensions and given a share in the profits, which are reported to be approximately $50,000 a year.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the Prince of Lippe-Detmold is a dealer in butter and eggs, while he has as a side line a busy brick factory that adds materially to his income.

The King of Wurtemberg is the proprietor of two hotels within his domains, which are reported to be worth something like $45,000 annually to him.

The Emperor of Austria-Hungary like the Kaiser, operates a china factory. This establishment, situated near the Austrian capital, is said to employ more than a thousand skilled workmen. The King of Saxony, too, has business interests of this character, though on a smaller scale.

Perhaps the most unconventional of the Royal business men is the King of Servia, who, in addition to several shops doing general trade, is said to promote the sale of a patent medicine and to run a motor car agency.

steel laying is now in progress. Mr. Cochrane states that he expects rail to Thicket Portage, 185 miles, will be laid this year, while grading will be carried very much farther.

The minister hopes to have the road completed by 1914 and has stated that it would certainly be finished by 1915.

(Special to The Times)

Ottawa, June 3.—Hon. Frank Cochrane is showing remarkable energy in pushing the Hudson Bay Railway. The contracts are already let for the whole of the line from Le Pas to the Bay. The minister announced in the House this week that the government had definitely selected Nelson for the terminals and work is to be pressed forward on the harbor. There was launched this week a specially built hydraulic dredge which will do the dredging on the harbor, while three charactered steamers will leave sometime in June for Nelson to carry provisions, supplies and equipment for the harbor work.

Contract For Construction.

The contract let so far are as follows: From Le Pas to Thicket Portage, $2,500,000 for 185 miles; from Thicket Portage to Split Lake Junction, $1,000,000, and from Split Lake Junction to Hudson Bay, $1,000,000. Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, for fifteen hundred dollars (1,500.00), which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

MEAT IN THE WEST

Attention Is Drawn to the Demand for Mixed Farming Products

The seriousness of the food supply problem of the prairie provinces is being rapidly realized by wide awake citizens. Recently a conference composed of leading railway men, meat packers, representative farmers, and officials of the Provincial Government was held at Winnipeg to devise ways and means to save the West from an impending meat famine. The moral is that western farmers must devote more attention to mixed farming if there is to be any permanent improvement in the situation. Referring to this the Toronto Globe says:

"The moral for the Canadian farmer is that he should consider the practicability of increasing his production of beef and thus take advantage of a market that is becoming increasingly profitable. There is no danger of glutting that market if the farmers will only by wise breeding and careful feeding keep up the quality of the animals they rear for food consumption. In Ontario there are many farmers who would find this sort of industry a good way to lessen their perplexity over the scarcity of labor, and to improve at the same time the quality of their farms. There are great deforested areas in this Province not adapted for general farming, but admirably adapted for ranching young cattle. Many Western grain-growers who foresee the necessity of mixed farming to preserve their farms from sterility, could usefully resort to beef products as a means of accomplishing the desired result. And the Canadian consumer is quite as much interested in the problem as the Canadian farmer.

Without a plentiful supply of meat at reasonable prices it will be difficult to develop factories in Western Canada.

HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS

Papers Which Deal With Western Affairs of Years Ago

The most valuable Canadian historical documents which have been discovered for years have been collected together by Prof. Oliver, professor of history, in Saskatchewan University. Prof. Oliver, who has been working at the archives for the Government, has succeeded in locating practically all the records of the Assiniboia Council of Manitoba, which was the only government in the west for years before Manitoba entered Confederation.

Hon. Dr. Roche, Secretary of State, thinks that these manuscripts will prove of exceeding value to historians and believes that they will throw fresh light on the early history of the west.

ALL FOR THE SAKE OF BETSY

When Col. J. J. Astor Jeopardized His Yacht and Passengers for a Dog.

Some years ago Col. J. J. Astor and his yacht Nourmahal and his son, Vincent, were reported lost at sea, the New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Times-Star recalls. Every one got excited about it—especially in New York newspaper offices. It was a New York newspaper, you may remember, which ran this headline over the story of the wreck of the Titanic: "Col. John Jacob Astor Lost at Sea; Two Thousand Others Also Drowned."

The Astor part of the headline was in very large pink letters and the rest was comparatively modest type. When the Nourmahal was reported lost the papers began to talk about sending out searching expeditions. The government dispatched a cruiser to search for Astor. Now Richard Barry tells the story of that episode for the first time. "Astor was very fond of his pet dog," says Barry. "The pet dog hated the sea. The second day out on the cruise the dog began to mope. Astor told the captain of the yacht to point her nose for shore. 'I'll take Betsy off and give her a run,' said the master of millions.

"They landed that day on the Carolina shore and Betsy got her run. But one run wasn't enough for her. Each day, as they voyaged south, Betsy was taken on land to stretch her legs. Finally they were off the Honduras coast, and Betsy began to howl for a frolic. The captain protested that the coast line was insufficiently charted, and that the Nourmahal was in danger of being wrecked if he was obliged to run in too near.

"'No matter,' said Astor. 'Betsy isn't happy.'

"So they put in, and shelved the Nourmahal on a rock, and every one north of Panama became violently excited because it wasn't possible to hear from the Astors, and it cost the yacht owner a good many dollars to get her off. But he didn't care. He was fond of Betsy—and Betsy had her run."

DEFENDER OF MAFEKING

Soldier Who Headed Successful Sortie in an Armored Train

Captain Ashley P. W. Williams one, one of the gallant defenders of Mafeking in the Boer War, died at his Dorsetshire home at the age of forty-five.

At the commencement of the siege of Mafeking General Baden-Powell determined not merely to protect the town, but to assume the offensive, and on Oct. 14, 1899, he sent out an armored train, under Captain Williams with about fifty men, two Maxims, and a Hotchkiss, to attack some Boers to the north.

The operation was successful, and Captain Williams on his return home for this and other services received the D.S.O. distinction. The borough of Dorchester also conferred upon him its freedom.

BULL-FIGHTER'S ROMANCE

"The Little Bombshell" as a Lady-killer And all Round Sport

The sensation of the day throughout Spain is the news that the most celebrated bull-fighter in the country, known as El Bombita, or "the little bombshell," who received $2,500 for every fight in which he appeared, and now possesses a fortune exceeding $1,000,000, has carried off a beautiful senorita, who has fled with him from Malaga. Bombita does not resemble the old fashioned type of bull-fighter. He speaks French fluently, knows a little English, wears a frock coat, and dresses elegantly, always stays at the leading hotels and frequents the best society, possesses motor-cars and is, generally speaking, more a dandy than a bull-fighter.

The parents of the lady have begun judicial proceedings, and the judge in charge of the case has sent telegrams all over Spain ordering the detention of the bull-fighter and the young lady, but the people in general believe that the romance will end to the sound of wedding bells.

DAVID WON A WIFE

Encounter With a Burglar Lucky Stroke for Plucky Young Salesman.

By AUGUSTUS GOODRICH SHERWIN.

There was only one ray of light visible about the plant of the Interstate Manufacturing company. That was in a corner of the main office, where David Harris sat poring over an account book. Once in a while he lifted his eyes and stared dreamily at the wall. It was not from weariness or distaste for the extra work he was doing. It was when the picture of his fiance, pretty Mary Lee, came floating into his mind, and the air castles concerning her formed a perfect vista of magical creations

As to the extra work, David welcomed that heartily. It meant extra money, and ready cash was a large element in his prospects just now. The company employing him did not pay princely salaries. Practical, hard-fisted old Silas Lee, Mary's father, had set the figure David must earn before he would consent to a marriage with his daughter. What worried David was that an advance in salary seemed a long ways off. Worse than that, he believed old Lee capable of encouraging the advances of suitors more desirable in a money way.

"Mary loves me, that's sure," soliloquized John, "so I can only keep plugging away. Perhaps a new opening may come along. Anyhow, I'll go at the work with the best that's in me. Hello!"

David was suddenly startled. The office door went open with a crash, and Mr. Morse, president of the company, plunged into view. He held an open telegram in his hand, and he looked anxious and flustered.

"Nobody here but you," he spoke in [illegible]. David faltered.

No, sir, I had some extra work—"

"Yes, yes— I know all about that; but where is Simmons, the head salesman?" asked the manufacturer.

"He started on his vacation this afternoon."

Mr. Morse sank into a chair, mopping his brow and acting pretty well disgusted. Then he fell to looking David over.

He Chuckled When David Explained Why He Was an Early Caller.

"See here," he said finally, "did you ever sell our goods?"

"Except to calling customers and through correspondence, no sir," admitted David, rather reluctantly.

"Do you think you could?"

"I'd try mighty hard, given a chance," replied David, wondering if the "new opening" was coming his way.

"Very well, I'm going to test you out," declared Mr. Morse with sudden determination. "Now, listen carefully. You know Borden, our traveling salesman? From the office we worked up a ten thousand dollar order for four machines from a Mr. William Henry of Acton. There were other bids, but our goods seemed to please Henry."

"I remember the case," said David.

"Three days ago Borden started for Acton. The next day we forwarded to his address at the American hotel there the specifications and contracts. Today we learned that he had gone off on one of his irregular bouts. I have just received a telegram from the American hotel, stating that he has not shown up there. You know Borden throws everything to the winds when his drinking fit takes him. I believe that some business rivals are in a plot to sidetrack him, and probably have him shut up somewhere, dazed or drugged."

"That is a pretty bad state of affairs," suggested David.

"Now for the remedy," said Mr. Morse sharply. "The contract is to be let tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. If you think yourself strong enough to undertake the job—start out. If you succeed it will mean a good deal for you, I can tell you that. A train leaves in half an hour."

"I shall be a passenger on that train," said David simply, and put on his coat.

At five o'clock the next morning David was camping on the front porch of the home of Mr. William Henry. He had reached Acton at midnight, had got the forwarded specifications and contract at the hotel, and had learned that Mr. Henry lived at a suburb ten miles out of the city. He had hired a taxicab, had arrived, and now—David was waiting for daylight and for his prospective customer to wake up.

He sat on the top step of the porch rather drowsily, but figuring out what he would say to Henry, and thinking of Mary. He had been there an hour. Suddenly the front door was pushed open. Quite as suddenly a man came out. He carried a bundle done up in a sheet so big that he could not see over it, ran against David, and before the latter could get out of the way, both tumbled head over heels to the bottom of the steps.

The bundle burst open. With a clatter, silverware, jewelry and clothing spread all over the steps. David grabbed at the man. The latter nearly stunned him by kicking out, made a dive for some near shrubbery, and disappeared.

"What's all that racket?" demanded a stentorian voice, and a man in pajamas appeared at an upper balcony out of a room opening upon it.

"Burglary, I guess," replied David.

"I'll be down in a minute," shouted the man aloft. "The mischief!" he added as he reappeared, below.

"The thief got away," explained David. "You see, he stumbled over me."

"Yes, but how came you to be on my porch at this unearthly hour of the morning?" inquired the disturbed house owner suspiciously.

"That will be easy to explain," assured David with a smile. "I am not a trespasser with evil designs."

"I should say not!" exclaimed Mr. William Henry. "You've saved me a heap. Hello, all the silver! My watch and chain! My fur winter overcoat! Why, the robber must have been ransacking the house for hours."

Mr. Henry went inside the hallway and sounded a gong. Two servants appeared. He directed the wonder-stricken pair to gather up the scattered plunder.

"You come in," he directed David. "Just wait till I get dressed. You must have something of a story to tell."

David was soon rejoined by his host in the library, into which he had been ushered.

"Now, then," spoke Mr. Henry, "let's hear all about it."

He looked pretty serious as David described the sudden appearance and wild flight of the burglar. Then his fat, jolly face creased into smiles, and he chuckled when David explained why he was an early caller.

"See here," said Mr. Henry, "you'll stay to breakfast with me. Then I've got something to say to you."

If David had been drowsy from his long vigil, the encounter with the burglar had roused him up pretty thoroughly. The ample meal to which he was invited by a most agreeable host encouraged him in the belief that Mr Henry fully appreciated his accidental helpfulness in his behalf.

"Well," spoke Mr. Henry, when the repast was concluded, "let us get down to business."

"Yes, sir," said David expectantly.

"You produce that contract, and we'll just sign up. If you don't deserve that and better for what you've saved me, I'm mistaken. I'd do it, anyway, for I think your business rivals have played a trick on you."

David Harris went proudly back to his employer with his big ten thousand dollar order. A raise in salary and position came within a week, a happy marriage within a month, and one of the pleasantest surprises of the event was a wedding present from Mr. William Henry of Acton of the best piano money could buy.

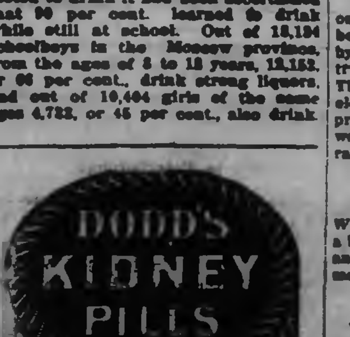
CHILD DRUNKARDS

Terrible Conditions Prevail in Russian Schools

Remarkable statements concerning drunkenness among Russian school children are made by H. M. Grove, the British Consul, in his report on the trade of the Moscow district. It is admitted, he writes, that inebriety is very rapidly increasing among the school children in Russia in general and in Moscow and the Moscow provinces in particular. The Moscow Town Council recently made an inquiry into this subject, and it was stated that of the adults who are addicted to drink it had been ascertained that 90 per cent. learned to drink while still at school. Out of 18,194 schoolboys in the Moscow province, from the ages of 8 to 18 years, 12,152, or 66 per cent., drink strong liquors, and out of 10,404 girls of the same ages 4,722, or 45 per cent., also drink.



OLD SOLDIER RETURNS HOME

Pioneer of Winnipeg, Who Fought in Many Wars of the Empire, Goes Back to Little Scottish Village

Winnipeg lost one of her pioneers in the departure for the "Land o' Cakes" of Captain John McKay, who was for many years in the service of the Dominion Government prisons branch. "Jack" McKay was a resident of Manitoba for upward of 32 years and can tell tales of stirring times around Fort Garry. A soldier for almost a whole lifetime, Captain John stands straight and sturdy and carries his 83 years with a mien of a man of 60 years. In fact, he says people believe him to be fabricating when he tells them his age, so young does he look.

Prior to his departure, Mr. McKay said he was looking forward with great delight to seeing his old home again in the little village of New Galloway, Kirkcudbrightshire, Scotland.

Prior to coming to Canada Captain McKay saw service in the British army, taking part in the Turkish and Crimean campaigns. On his breast he still wears a faded, yet nevertheless highly treasured ribbon, the various colors of which denote the engagement in which he has taken part. In his pocket he carries several medals. Chief among these is a Crimean medal. Attached to the Crimean medal are four bars inscribed respectively, Sebastapol, Alma, Inkermann, and Balaclava. In these four battles Captain John saw active fighting, and as his memory is undimmed by the years his eyes sparkle as he recounts anecdotes of the campaign.

When asked if he regretted leaving Canada and if he would come back, Captain McKay said he hardly regretted leaving this country in view of the greater joy in seeing his old home again. He said it was hardly to be expected that he would come back again.

Jabot fronts that fall far below the waist are a novel feature of a blouse much worn.

ORIENTAL FANATICS

A Peculiar Man Who Was Venerated as a Saint

In many parts of the Orient a lunatic has always been reverenced as one who is much nearer God than any sane person. During the Crimean war a Mohammedan religionist from Bagdad joined the Turkish army as a ghazi, or warrior for religion. He was a man of rare mental gifts and immense learning. Yet bare-headed and bare-footed, with scanty clothing, his sword girded about his lean loins, this fanatic marched through snow and ice at the head of his division, or led the way into the thickest of the fights. Five times a day, when he said his prayers, he ungirt his sword. But save then, either by day or night, sleeping or waking, he never went unarmed. He was a scholar, thoroughly versed in Arabic and Persian literature. Even in his own house, though speaking to wife, children and friends, no other word but "Ali" ever passed his lips. If he wanted food or drink, if he begged or bought, his wants were expressed by "Ali." He would race up and down the streets of the city for a day, shrieking at the top of his voice, "Ali! Ali!" Everyone venerated this fanatic as a saint. The richest man in the city presented him with a magnificent horse, saddle and bridle. Vaulting into the saddle, as soon as he had received the gift, he galloped through the town shouting "Ali! Ali!" Riding into the noisy bazaar, he cried "Ali" with such strength of voice as to be heard clearly above the frightful din of the shouting buyers and pounding mechanics.

New Idea For Street Cars

Several Canadians were passengers on the first train in the world to be operated by electricity generated by a portable storage battery. The trial took place at New York, and Thomas A. Edison, the "wizard of electricity" who was also present, prophesied that the new system would revolutionize the operation of railroad trains and street cars.

GREAT AEROPLANE FLEET

Germany Is Devoting Much Attention to Air Warfare

"Germany has at last consecrated itself in earnest to the development of an aeroplane fleet," said Major von Tschudi, the distinguished aeronautical officer, who has developed Johannisthal to its present eminent position. "We have not lost our faith in the superiority of dirigible airships for the carrying of men and explosives, but the aeroplane has now come fully into its own. Hundreds of Germans are learning to fly. At Johannisthal Leipzig, Munich, Mayence, Frankfort, Weimar, Teltow, and Mulhausen, where the most important training camps are maintained, the utmost activity and enthusiasm prevail. In the Army airmanship has become almost a passion. Many more young officers are volunteering for the new arm than the War Office can possibly use. Army orders for aeroplanes are rapidly putting the construction industry on a sound commercial basis. If the Reichstag were suddenly to pass a huge 'aerial programme,' it would find that the plant exists capable of carrying it out. There is talk in official circles of a scheme of Government subsidies for privately owned aeroplanes, such as now exists with regard to motor-cars. If this project should materialise, Germany will become possessed of an air fleet which need not fear a brush with the most powerful rival." The German Army Estimates for 1913 provide for $30,000 of additional funds for the Verkehrstruppen, which include the flying arm. It is believed that the lion's share of this increase is destined for the expansion of the aeroplane fleet and for the creation of "flying garrisons" at strategic points on the frontiers.

AN IMMENSE ORCHARD

Fourteen Hundred Acres of British Columbia Fruit Farm

Among the largest individual orchards in British Columbia is that owned by J. D. Anderson, about fourteen miles from Rossland.

Here he owns 1,400 acres, which he purchased when land was cheap, from the Provincial Government. On this tract he cleared 130 acres and 120 of this was planted with 11,000 fruit threes and about 4,000 small fruits, including raspberry, blackberry, currant and gooseberry bushes.

A majority of the trees are of the known popular commercial varieties which give the best results in British Columbia. For instance, he has 3,000 Jonathans, 3,000 Mackintoshes, and 2,500 Northern Spies.

Trees are planted with a surveyor's transit and a 300-foot steel tape, and from whatever angle they are looked at present symetrical appearance. A few acres are donated to potatoes and other vegetables, and more to clover, which yields an immense crop.

Besides fruit, Mr. Anderson has 500 White Leghorn chickens, a number of pedigree Berkshire hogs, a large flock of ducks and five hives of bees, which number of swarms will naturally increase. Bees are a necessary part of the orchardist's plant, as they aid in fertilizing the blossoms by carrying the pollen from one tree to another.

From fifteen to twenty men are constantly employed in and about the orchard which has been carried along on the best scientific lines, and in such a manner as to make a failure almost impossible.

EDIBLE MUSHROOMS

Simple Rules to be Followed in Order to Avoid Poisonous Varieties

It is not hard to distinguish edible mushrooms from poisonous varieties. The common mushroom (agaricus campestris) is usually found in open, grassy fields, often on old pastures and lawns, but never in the woods. It has a fleshy cap, dun colored on top and pink beneath, the pink gills turning dark brown or black when mature and after gathering. There are many other good varieties, but the agaricus is the commonest. Mushrooms which are gathered in the open which have pink gills that turn brown or black after being gathered, it is safe to eat.

The two poisonous varieties which are most common are the amanita muscaria and the amanita phalloides. They are usually found in or near woods. They have yellow or white gills, and the stem of the latter rises from a cup-like base. Mushrooms gathered in the woods, which have yellow or white gills (not pink) or have cup attachments at the base of their stem, should be shunned; they are probably poisonous.

MAKING PATENT FUEL.

In the coal-mines a large amount of small coal is sent up, and, although the miner is not paid for it, it is far from being worthless or useless, the coal-owner selling all the small made at the pits.

In Cardiff, Swansea, and Port Talbot there are works where small coal is converted into blocks called patent fuel. The method is by tipping the coal into a large bin, after which it is mixed with pitch, and all ground very fine. It is then conveyed into pug-mills, and super-heated steam is passed through it, knives revolving on a shaft keeping it in motion while this is being done.

Afterwards, being then in a sticky condition, it is passed into a press, and a tremendous pressure applied. This turns the mass into hot, steaming blocks, which are then pushed off either on to endless travelling wires which convey them into canal-boats or to a jetty, whence they are loaded into ships for conveyance abroad. The different Governments use a great deal of it for naval purposes.

In the pit itself much of the small coal that is cut is thrown back with the rubbish, and only large coal is loaded and taken up.

Protecting Pencil Point

To prevent a pencil from continually breaking its point by falling have brother slip a small quantity of lead into an empty cartridge shell and wedge the shell tightly on the end of the pencil opposite the point. Then if the pencil falls the weighted end will hit the ground first and the point will be preserved.

Centenarian Dead

Mr. Townsend Hall, the oldest resident of the Eastern Townships, died at Farnham Centre, Que., at the age of 103 years and five months. Up to within a short time of his death, Mr. Hall showed no signs of failing mentality and was more active than many men much younger.

HOUSEWIVES' HINTS

A teaspoonful of borax to a quart of water will make hard water soft, so that it can be used for washing the most delicate skin.

If grease is spilled upon the kitchen stove throw a handful of salt upon it and it will prevent any disagreeable odor arising.

After peeling vegetables, to remove the stains from the hands, take a piece of the peeling and rub the stains before washing the hands.

When baking cakes or scones, if the soda is dissolved in a little boiling milk it prevents the disagreeable lumps which are so often seen.

If you use an oil or gas stove keep a box of sand at hand in case of an accident. Sand will extinguish burning oil when water will only increase the flames.

Permanganate of potash will cleanse dirty filters of all impurities. A solution should be passed through the filter until it comes out as pink as when it was poured in.

Instead of putting food into the oven to keep hot for latecomers, try covering it closely with a tin, and set over a basin of hot water. This plan will keep the food hot, and at the same time prevent it from drying.

Always read the label on a medicine bottle every time you give a dose, and no matter how well you know the bottle. Bottles bear a great external similarity to one another, but their contents are generally vastly different.

ONTARIO'S VASTNESS

Few people realize what a tremendous province Ontario is. It extends for nearly twelve hundred miles from east to west and over a thousand miles from south to north. The northernmost point of Ontario is as far north of Toronto as New Orleans is south. Ontario is over three times the area of Great Britain and Ireland, is almost exactly twice as large as France, and is almost twice as large as the Empire of Germany. Inside of the territory of Ontario could be got all six of the New England states—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, the entire state of New York, the great states of Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois and North and South Dakota, and yet room would be left for the State of New Jersey.

FREAKS OF THE FILM

Every one must have noticed that in moving pictures the wheels of carriages or automobiles often seem to be turning backward instead of forward. An authority says:—In taking a moving picture there are, perhaps, sixteen exposures made each second. If now the spokes of the wheel of a carriage move with a speed so that the spokes are in the same position at each exposure, that wheel will seem to stand still in the picture. If the wheel is moving slower, then the spokes will seem further backward in the successive views, and the wheel will seem to turn backward, while it will be seen to turn forward when the spokes move fast enough to occupy positions further forward in each exposure. It is a matter of the interruption for the exposure and the motion of the wheel. If there are sixteen exposures and the wheel turns through the space between two spokes in one-sixteenth of a second, the wheel would be in the same position at each successive exposure, and so would not seem to move at all.

HOW TO MAKE RAIN

Dynamite in Large Quantities Necessary to Produce Results

Successful experiments in rain-making were tried at Battle Creek, Michigan, where 4,500 pounds of dynamite were exploded, in 1,500 shots, and a downpour of rain followed, without wind, thunder or lightning.

There was a firing station every one-eighth mile. The dynamite was laid on the ground in 3 pound charges and exploded every few minutes at each of the fifteen stations. The battle started at 10.30 in the morning and continued until 3.30 in the afternoon. The detonations could be heard for a distance of 20 miles.

About 1.30 a slight precipitation was noticed, but this was more like a mist than a rain. When the firing ceased, the sky was overcast with clouds. About 4.30 the rain began to fall and continued in showers until eight o'clock. the government rain gauge showed a fall of nearly half an inch—.44 being the official report.

Painting Metal

According to exhaustive tests by two German scientists one coat of paint or varnish protects iron from corrosion better than two or more coats.

Substitute for Radium

Carnotie, a mineral found in Colorado, has been found sufficiently radio-active to produce shadow photographs resembling those made by X-rays.

Weak, Tired Folks Given New Vigor

STRENGTH RETURNS, HEALTH RENEWED, VITALITY OF YOUTH RE-CREATED

Exhaustion and Bodily Tiredness Every Day Being Turned Into Vigor and Ambition by Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

From Chebogue Pt., N.S., comes the following from Mrs. W. A. Reynolds: "A year ago my health began to fail, I lost my appetite, became nervous and sleepless. My weight ran down, I became thin, hollow-cheeked, and black rings under my eyes. I really felt as if the charm of life had left me and when springtime arrived I was in the 'blues.' I read of Dr. Hamilton's Pills and got five boxes at once.

"Within a month my appetite and color were good. I gained strength and felt like a new woman. New life and vigor returned, and my friends scarcely knew me. A medicine that will do this should be in every home."

Good health means much to you. Success and happiness depend upon it. The maintenance and source of health is found in Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box, or five boxes for $1.00, at all druggists and storekeepers, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

C. P. R. Improvements.

Mr. Wm. Taylor and two men have been busily engaged at the C.P.R. depot making beds, cutting grass, etc., and by all appearances the plot will be very pretty when finished.

A Deferred Burial.

A yellow dog shot on Saturday because of its being hurt by an automobile, the marksman being Detective Sam H. Newhall, was still lying yesterday beside the market weigh scales. Such a deferred burial is a "doggone" shame.

A C.P.R. Trespass Case

Martin Gorman was charged with walking on the C.P.R. tracks. He pleaded not guilty. A C.P.R. cop said that prisoner walked across the C.P.R. bridge. He followed Gorman and caught him. There are notices forbidding walking on [illegible] tracks. [illegible] which was paid. Frank Primeau also paid [illegible] for a similar infraction of law.

Mrs. Rubidge Dying.

The many friends of Mrs. George W. Rubidge will regret to learn that at the time of going to press, the popular local lady was reported as ill, beyond all hopes of recovery at the residence of her relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Gladman, Dickson street. In fact, it was doubtful whether Mrs. Rubidge would survive the night.

Business Men's Outing.

Invitations are being issued for the 10th annual outing of the Business and Professional men of Peterborough. This outing will be spent at Idyl Wyld, on June 27th, those attending to be conveyed per Steamer Esturion. This is one of the most popular outings of the season and has always been enjoyed by those fortunate enough to be worked.

Local Banker Promoted.

Mr. Roy Thompson, ledger keeper in the Bank of Ottawa here, left last night per C.P.R. for Ottawa to take a similar position in the head office there. Mr. Thompson returned yesterday to the city for a week end visit to Stoney Lake. His many friends here, whilst regretting his departure will congrgtulate him on his success.

Our Street Lights.

An experienced electrician interviewed Mayor Bradburn yesterday re street lights. His Worship explained the system decided upon by the city and the visitor was loud in his praise of the scheme. In Calgary, where the Mayor's caller said they had the finest street in Canada, the magnetite arc lamp, such as will be used here, is installed. The Mayor's visitor was also very much in favor of the combination pole.

Excursion Here.

Yesterday a big excursion from Port McNicholl, Orillia, Lindsay and other points intervening, arrived in the city yesterday per C.P.R. The excursion, the first of the season here, was run under auspices of the True Blues. About 600 came by it. The visitors had a big day in the city. During the afternoon, about 300 took a trip over the Lift Lock on the good ship Esturion, under command of Capt. White. The visitors returned home at 7 p.m.

Pictures Fatal Fight.

Mr. Chris. Graham of the White House has received some splendid photographs of the fatal Pelkey-McCarthy prize fight at Calgary on May 24th. The pictures, which were sent to Mr. Graham by Mr. Leo Clancy, formerly of Peterborough, show the contestants just before the fight commenced, the preliminary sparring and the scene after the fatal blow, when the doctors were working over the prostrate form of McCarthy.

A Miss-Fire Suit.

A man named Ira McMullen asked to get $11 wages due him by Mr. Chas. Nixon. McMullen said he worked for 4 weeks for Nixon for $6 a week. iiAll he got was $13. To Mr. Nixon, McMullen said he got the first week's wages but denied Nixon had paid the second week's wages to his, McMullen's wife. Mr. Nixon swore he had paid McMullen $19 and gave him his board and had to pay another man $5 for four days' work done when the former was drunk. Case dismissed.

Belleville—Barnum and Bailey

Belleville yesterday had a civic celebration. One would think, to quote the Ontario, of that city, that its editor was a close student of Barnum & Bailey's literature. Speaking of an aviator who arrived there last Sunday, the Ontario says: "One would expect, after hearing so much of this death-defying peerless aviator, who has been proclaimed all over the American continent as the most marvellous and skillful navigator of the air living to-day, to find a man who was rather conscious of his greatness but such is far from the fact.

Lindsay Girl Badly Hurt.

Lindsay Post: Miss Edna Roenigk was the victim of a severe accident in Wakely's store, which might have been attended with more serious results. She was in the millinery department of the store waiting for her sister, Miss Gertie Roenigk, when some scoundrel threw three stones through the window. One of them struck Miss Roenigk on the head, inflicting an ugly gash. It was a glancing blow, and the fact that Miss Roenigk had her hat on at the time prevented what might have been a fatality. Miss Roenigk was stunned by the effects of the blow, and was moved to her home in a hack.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed. Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Japs Seek Knowledge.

Six citizens of Nippon arrived in the city yesterday. These Japs belong to a branch of the General Electric Company in Japan. The men are all experienced in the various branches, such as engineering, moulding, tool-making, testing machines, and the general management of the factory. Mr. S. Kewado, a draughtsman, is the spokesman for the party and said that when these men return to Japan they are supposed to be able to introduce the various methods used in the Canadian General Electric Company's factories. The party visited the Canadian General yesterday.

A Monument to Mrs. Nicholls.

The city might well invest a few hundred dollars for a commemorative statue to the late Mrs. Nicholls, before flinging away tens of thousands on new factories. "Charity begins at home." The new factories, whether they continue or go into bare walls, like several in town, only help a limited class of the community which pays the 25 mills and assist in the sale of south town vacatt land. Mrs. Nicholls has left perpetual reminders that are daily used by grateful thousands of our local citizens, and there is no closing her parks up and shipping the flowers and grass to France.

No Corkscrew Used?

At yesterday's police court, W. McCliggott was charged with being drunk. P. C. Meagher said that he was called to Chamberlain street. The prisoner was talking loudly and had a big sealed bottle. The prisoner said he did not intend to have the wife there any longer. He was drunk. McCliggott said his wife hah gone to Toronto, and only got back Monday. McCliggott said he did not have the cork out of the bottle. He told his wife, if she would get out he would pay her board. He admitted that family trouble had occurred before. $2 to be paid forthwith.

Colored Pastor Interviewed

Rev. J. G. Taylor, a colored pastor of Chatham, Ont., who has been a guest at the Munro House for some days past, leaves today for Lindsay. A Times representatives yesterday, had a chat with this clergyman. In reply to our scribe's question "What are you doing here?" Mr. Taylor replied: "I am getting subscriptions towards a technical school to be established at Chatham, similar to that located at Tuskagee, Ala., by Booker Washington." The colored divine, who is a remarkably clever and well educated man, showed our reporter, among other subscribers to this cause, the names of Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden and Hon. W. F. White.

Should Have Been.

At yesterday's police court, Gran Innis was charged with having been too drunk to attend to a horse, when the latter was on the street. P.C. Sills said he found Innis lying in his rig asleep. The officer took the horse to the station. Innis said he had driven a passenger 7 miles back of Buckhorn. He only had two drinks and was not drunk. He only took one bottle of lager and fell asleep because tired after driving 54 miles. He drank the lager before leaving the city. His worship asked "did they arrest you for taking a bottle into a local option locality?" "No, sir; but they should have arrested me for taking an empty bottle there." Innis was discharged.

AGED, WRINKLED FACES EASILY REJUVENATED

(From The Beauty Seeker).

An aged face is often only a mask to a comparatively youthful person. Beneath is a countenacne young and fair to look upon. It's a simple matter to remove the mask. Ordinary mercolized wax, to be had at any drug-store, gradually absorbs the worn-out surface skin; in a week or two the user has the loveliest pinky white complexion imaginable. An ounce of the wax usually is sufficient to complete the transformation. It is put on at night like cold cream and taken off in the morning with warm water.

This remarkable treatment is invariably effective, no matter how muddy, sallow or discolored the complexion. Freckles, moth-patches, liver spots, pimples, blackheads and other cutaneous blemishes, naturally vanish with the discarded skin.

To remove wrinkles, here is a recipe that cannot be too highly recommended. Powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½-pint witch hazel. Use as a wash lotion. It acts instantaneously and is wonderfully effective.

WEDDING BELLS.

Austin—Lovell.

A quiet wedding took place Monday evening at 222 London street. The contracting parties were Mrs. W. Austin, who became the bride of John Lovell of Peterborough. The bride was assisted by Mrs. Stadward. Mr. H. Palmer acted as best man. The Rev. Isaac Couch officiated. After the ceremony refreshments were served and an enjoyable evening was spent Ryan—Lynch.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized by Rev. M. J. O'Brien, D.D., at the Church of the Sacred Heart, yesterday morning, when Miss Mary Lynch, daughter of Mr. Edward Lynch, Otonabee, became the charming bride of Mr. A. Ryan. Miss Aellie Lynch a sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, while Mr. A. Donahue acted as groomsman.

The happy couple left for a short honeymoon after which they will reside on Rink street.

A girl on Gilmour street was yesterday asked by a gentleman friend, "Do you like dressed olives?" This demure little damsel, with downcast eyes and modest mien replied "Why I wouldn't look at them if they were undressed."

WORLD'S BEST COMING

Barnum and Baily Show Adds Big $500,000 Spectacle.

The Barnum and Bailey Greatest Show on Earth is announced for two performances in Peterborough Monday, June 23. To it has been added the wonderful spectacle of "Cleopatra," the greatest performance of its kind ever presented in America. It is enacted on a stage bigger than a hundred ordinary theatres and with a cast of 1,260 characters, a great chorus, a ballet of 350 dancing girls and 700 horses. A trainload of special scenery, costumes, properties and stage effects are used. This in itself is a mighty achievement, equal in attractiveness to the show itself.

This circus has stood at the head of the amusement business for more than fifty years. The policy of P. T. Barum and James A. Bailey is still active in its management. These are the two greatest names in the history of circus affairs. Their show is the source of perfect satisfaction. It is recognized in every country on earth as the leading spirit among amusement enterprises. It has travelled in every country where the sun shines. It has entertained millions upon millions of the earth's peoples. Its world-wide tours have given it many advantages over other tented shows. They have kept it in constant touch with remote corner of the globe whence come all wonders.

Nearly all great arenic novelties originate in Europe or Asia. No sooner have they been exploited in foreign audience rooms than they are secured by Barum and Bailey's agents. Invariably novelties are introduced to America by the circus. When they cease to be novelties they are passed down to other shows and another hundred of imported wonders takes their places. This year's program is particularly abundant. It is a purely foreign bill. Over 100 startling acts are presented by 100 of the leading artists of the world.

TENDERS WANTED

SEALED TENDERS marked "Tender for Fuel," and addressed to the undersigned, will be received until 12 o'clock noon, Thursday, June 5th, for 500 tons or more of soft coal, to be weighed on the market scales and delivered to the different schools as required.

Tenderers must specify clearly the kind of coal tendered on.

FIGHT WITH LEOPARDS ON DECK OF SHIP

One Man Leaps to Death Into Mediterranean When Wild Animals Get Loose.

Philadelphia, Pa., June 3.—A desperate struggle with a pair of leopards on the deck of the British steamship Rheinfels during a heavy electrical storm was reported here today when the vessel arrived from Calcutta after a voyage of 51 days. While the vessel was steaming through the Mediterranean on May 5 a tropical storm arose. The rolling and pitching of the craft tore the animal cages from their fastenings and soon the cry was heard that two of the "cats" were loose.

Frightened by the animals, one of the crew, a Lascar, leaped overboard and was drowned. Chief Officers Oscar Schmidt and Second officer Hans Hummel, aided by several members of the crew, captured the animals.

PARCELS POST BILL BROUGHT DOWN IN OTTAWA HOUSE

The Government Decides to Establish a Provincial Zone System

Ottawa, June 4.—In introducing the Parcel Post bill in the Commons to-day, Hon. Mr. Pelletier said that there was on the statute book legislation relating to the subject. Section 74 of the Postal Service Act gave to the Postmaster-General Power to fix the rate of postage on fourth-class material. The bill before the House fixed eleven pounds as the limit of weight of parcels and the measurements were the same as those adopted by all other countries, of 72 inches length and girth combined. They were adopting the bill features of the Act recently passed by the United States. The zone system would be adopted, but not on the lines that obtained in the United States. There were 3,500 units in the United States setting the radii of zones. The system was admirable, but very complicated.

Provincial Zones.

The Government had decided to establish each Province as a zone. But the three Maritime Provinces would be considered as one zone. Then there would be a local zone 20 miles in extent for which cheap rates would be given and to which the Provincial boundaries would not apply. The object of this zone was to protect the local dealers and country merchants from competition of departmental stores operating through post. The 20 mile section would form the first zone, beyond the Provincial limits would form a third zone, and so on from coast to coast. The department did not propose to operate the system at a loss. It would be conducted as a business enterprise.

The boxes for the rural mail delivery, he said, were too small for a parcel service, but the arranging of rates with the railway companies formed the principal difficulties.

On a Business Basis

The belief acted upon by all Governments that it is necessary to pay large sums out of the public treasury to private interests is receiving hard shocks these days. Mr. Burnham, M.P., has strongly attacked this ancient custom in the House. He believes that what the nation pays for it should own. The Laurier Government gave the steel interests no less than twenty millions in direct payment to the companies. It gave the lead-miners two millions. It gave the railway financiers and promoters immense sums. Mr. Burnham has opposed the continuance of this unfair custom, and has demanded that business be done on a business basis.

SUMMONSES HAVE BEEN ISSUED IN THE FORGED TICKET CASE

Wm. Crawford, Inspector of Public Buildings, and Robert Leamen, of Department of Health, Charged With Uttering in Connecting With Laurier Meeting

Toronto, June 4.—Informations were laid and summonses issued this morning against William Srawford, Inspector of Public Buildings for Ontario, and Robert Leamen, Inspector of Plumbing for the Medical Department of Health, charging both men with uttering forged tickets in connection with the Laurier meeting held at the Arena Gardens. The charges being preferred by F. W. Summerhayes.

It was learned this morning that other Conservatives who were under suspicion of having uttered the forged tickets will be called upon to give evidence against Messrs. Crawford and Leamen.

William Crawford was until about six years ago Captain of the Berkeley street Fire Department. Sustaining injuries while attending a fire, he applied for, and received a pension, retiring from the department. He later received the appointment to the position of Inspector of Public Buildings for the Ontario Government, a position which he now holds.

HANGED FOR CANNIBALISM

Big Hole Made in Membership of Sierra Leone "Leopard Society."

London, June 3.—Convicted of the practice of cannibalism and human sacrifices, forty members of the "Leopard Society," a secret organization, have been hanged in Sierra Leone, a British colony on the west coast of Africa.

PRINCE ALBERT IN CANADA THIS WEEK, H.M.S. CUMBERLAND

Quebec, June 4.—The Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, Sir Francois LAngelier, received a wireless message this morning from Fame Point, sent by the Commander of H.M.S. Cumberland, to the effect that on the arrival of the Cumberland in this port to-morrow. Prince Albert, with the remainder of the cadets, will leave for Montreal and Toronto on their way to visit Niagara Falls, returning to Quebec next Sunday.

No civic reception or formal welcome will be tendered to Prince Albert, who is expected to arrive on Friday. Mr. J. W. Somers, secretary of the Civic Reception Committee explained that it was understood no public welcome was desired. At both Halifax and Montreal the Royal visitor has expressed his desire that no formal reception be tendered.

SECRET SERVICE

Being a Thrilling Story of Life in Richmond, Va., in 1865, Soon to be Printed in The Times.

In a few days, the Times will print one of the most thrilling stories ever presented in the public press. The story referred to is entitled "Secret Service" or the happenings of a night in Richmond, in the spring of 1865. This entrancing story of the War of the Rebellion, is told in clear cut, concise and intensely dramatic words. Watch the Times for a few days and secure the opening chapter of this life drama, depicted in words that hold one's interest.

LIBERAL MAJORITY IN AUSTRALIA STILL THREE

Great Interest is Being Taken in the Referendum Result—Another very Small Majority.

London, June 4.—The London Daily Telegraph's Sydney correspondent states that the latest returns from the Federal election leave the Liberal majority in the House of Representatives undistrubed. The position of the parties in the Senate is: Liberals, six; Labor thirty.

The correspondent adds that great interest is being taken in the referendum results, which are still incomplete. The figures for the whole Commonwealth show a small majority in favor of giving the Government increased power in the regulation of trade and commerce, and a substantial majority in favor of increased power in regulating the trusts.

MINISTER DECLARES FOR MINIMUM WAGE

Industry That Cannot Pay Living Wages Should Not Live, Says Mr. Sinclair.

Toronto, June 4.—"It is time the industries paid proper wages. An industry which cannot afford to do that ought not to live."

This was the statement of Rev. A. S. Sinclair of Winnipeg to the Congress last night on "The Material Basis of a Home."

He declared that the average scale of wages should at least be raised to the minimum set down by the authorities. He touched upon the Pure Foods Act and ventured a statement that the imports refused at the port of New York where shipped on to Canada. He also declared that the supply of milk should be municipalized.

NEW EVIDENCE HAS BEEN FOUND TO HELP GIBSON

Counsel is Presenting it to Minister of Justice in Request for Another Trial

Toronto, June 4.—To personally apply to the Minister of Justice for a new trial for Charles Gibson, whose execution is fixed for July 9th. Mr. T. H. Lennox, K.C., M.P. P., is in Ottawa to-day. It is understood that Mr. Lennox has already taken the preliminary steps for an application, with the result that he feels confident of success.

The new evidence upon which the application is based, will go to support the testimony of the soldiers as to who was on the bridge at the foot of Strachan avenue, on the night of the murder. Gibson, it will be remembered, declared that there were two men, known only slightly to him, who were to meet Rosenthal and Dunkelman on the bridge. He declared he took the latter there and left them and that he knew nothing of what subsequently occurred.

Soldier's Story.

In support of this, the defence produced a number of soldiers living at the fort, who told of seeing four men on the bridge as described by Gibson. In his address to the jury, Chief Justice Mulock minimized the evidence of these men, and, it is thought by the defence, thereby influenced the jury against Gibson. Efforts have since been made to secure every tittle of evidence in support of that of the soldiers' and, it is understood, with a considerable degree of success.

Time of the Murder.

Should a new trial be granted, the defence will also lay a great deal of weight on medical testimony to show that the murder was committed some hours after the time Gibson was at home and in bed.

KILLED AT SEAFORTH

Richard Anderson's Horse Took Fright at Train, With Fatal Results.

Seaforth, June 4.—A fatal accident occurred here this morning just as the train from Goderich came in. Mr. Richard Anderson, of Constance, a prominent farmer of middle age, was unloading hogs at the G.T.R. yards, when his horse took fright at the train, ran away, throwing deceased out upon his head beneath the waggon, killing him almost instantly.

BASEBALL

The Petes fell down to-day and lost to Berlin. Of course, they were not expected to win all the games, and the fans the anxiously awaiting their return. The boys have done well the last week and the games with Hamilton for the balance of the week are expected to be hard fought.

The score at the finish of the game was 3—1 in favor of Berlin.

Toronto Broke Even.

In yesterday's double-header, between Rochester and Toronto, and Buffalo and Toronto, the Leafs won the first game by a score of 4—3, and the second game went to Buffalo by the score of 6—2.

Types at Riverside Park.

The members of the Types Baseball club and all others interested are requested to meet to-night at Riverside Park, at 5 p.m. sharp for practice.

AERIAL RAIDS ON GERMAN CITIES IN THE EVENT OF WAR

German Paper Tells of Plot of Two French Airmen Attached to the Army

Berlin, June 4.—The Lokalanzeiger, which leads the anti-French press in Germany, gives prominence to another war scare calculated to increase the tension between Germany and her former enemy.

It deals with an alleged French plot to blow up the principal German cities by dropping explosives from aeroplanes and airships.

The publication of this article is obviously to facilitate the passage of the military increase bill, which includes a large proportion for strengthening Germany's aerial fleet.

According to the Lokalanzeiger, two French airmen, one called "Pol Timonier" and the other known only by the initials "L.B.," have formed an independent corps of volunteer air men. This organization is supposed to control eighteen aeroplanes and considerable capital.

The leaders of the corps are credited with having worked out the following plans of hostilities to be followed in the event of war between Germany and France:

WILL DESTROY GERMAN CITIES

As soon as Germany attacks France and attempts to flood the eastern provinces with Prussian troops, the volunteer airmen will fly direct to Berlin, carrying large quantities of contact bombs, which will be dropped on the city from a height sufficient to render the aeroplanes safe from bombardment.

Depots for the storage of petrol are said to have been established by the corps in order to replenish their fuel without returning to the permanent base, and supplies of explosives will also be stored near the German frontier.

Thus it will be possible to make a series of aerial "raids" on the principal cities of the empire. After Berlin has been wrecked, the corps will turn its attention to Dresden, Leipzig, Cologne, Frankfort and other large towns.

After the ordinary life of the nation has thus been paralyzed, the corps will concentrate its attacks on the invading Prussian army, and harass them by means of bomb-dropping.

The Lokalanzeiger's article will undoubtedly be reproduced by every German newspaper, and thus add to the ill-feeling against France.

NEW HOME TREATMENT FOR REMOVING HAIRS

Any woman troubled with superfluous hairs can remove them in the privacy of her home without pain or trouble by applying a delatone paste to the hairs not wanted. This paste is made by mixing powdered delatone with a little water. The paste is to remain on the skin 2 or 3 minutes, then rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This treatment is quick, harmless and leaves the skin without spot or blemish. An original ounce-package of delatone is ample.

To make eyebrows grow thick and glossy, rub pyroxin on frequently, and for stubby, straight eyelashes, apply pyroxin at lash-roots with thumb and forefinger. This makes them grow long, silky and curly. Use care and don't get any pyroxin where no hair is wanted

Miss Leona Sanderson passed in advanced course in the Faculty of Education.

IMMODEST APPAREL IS CAUSE OF CRIME

Deplores Manner in Which Women Vie With Each Other.

Hamilton, Ont., June 4.—"We appreciate heartily the attitude of the women of our land who refuse to bow to the mandate of Parisian and London fashions and we know they exert an influence for good. We just as distinctly deplore the manner in which many women seem to vie with each other in wearing immodest apparel, and believe that the wave of crime passing over the land is in no small degree due to the disregard of becoming appearance in this respect"

The above resolution was passed at the meeting of the Hamilton District Methodist conference to-day. The word "scantily" clad was in the original resolution, but was removed. There was a lively discussion on the question.

REFORM FOR ROMAN CHURCH MUST COME AND DEATH SURE

Congregationalists Minister Says Catholic Divines Have Worshipped Prince of Darkness

Toronto, June 4.—"The Church of Rome must reform or die," declared Rev. G. Ellery Read, chairman of the Congregational Union at the opening session of the seventh annual meeting of the union held this morning in the Northern Congregational church. "The explanation of the Church of Rome's failure lies largely in the fact that it was most concerned with matters alien to the true mission of the church. The secularization of the Roman Church made it a powerful instrument in determining the destinies of nations, but that very thing of which the church has boasted and to which it has clung with such fatal persistency has proved its undoing. Rome succumbed to the temptation that Christ met and conquered in the wilderness. They have bowed down and worshipped the Prince of Darkness that they might win the kingdoms of the world and control them by a power as despotic and absolute as any secular tyranny. Shock after shock is shaking the power of the Catholic Church, and the final outcome is inevitable."

Dealing with the reformation Rev. Mr. Read declared Luther's grand doctrine preached in Wittenberg was such as to "shake the foundations of Papacy and crack them so irremedially that all the ages would not suffice to restore them to their former unity."

Mr. Read called attention to the warning influence of the church in the business life of the people, and made a strong plea for a more enlightened people, who would hold by the faith and direct their lives in the Word of God.

JUDGE MORSON TO SEE "DEBORAH" PLAYED

Toronto, June 4.—Judge Morson is to see a private and uncensured performance of "Deborah" to-night to judge whether it is immoral. He will then give judgment in the appeal of the players from the Police Court conviction.

WELLAND MAN HAS RARE DOG TITLED ENGLISHWOMAN SEEKS

White Cocker Spaniel for Which Lady Somerset Offered to Pay $1,000 Owned by Mr. S. M. Clemo--Came With Three Black Ones

Welland, Ont., June 4.—If an offer of $1,000 for a white cocker spaniel of collie dog which was made about a year ago by Lady Somerset, of England is still good, S. M. Clemo, of Welland, thinks he has the dog which can claim the young fortune.

So far as is known the offer has never been taken up at this color of cocker spaniel is as scarce as a white black bird. Mr. Clemo is, therefore, going to open up correspondence with her ladyship with a view to satisfying her wish for rara avis. It is unlikely that the humble Welland dog may yet find its way to the celebrated white farm owned by the titled Englishwoman.

In a litter of four cocker spaniels owned by Mr. Clemo, three are black as the raven's wing and the fourth is pure white, not a spec of "color" about him anywhere. The mother is a beautiful black and the sire a pedigreed tan

SUFFRAGETTE TRIES TO STOP KING'S HORSE, FATALLY HURT

Seized Bridle of Anmer at Epsom Track and Was Crushed When Animal fell--The Jockey Was Also Seriously Injured

Epsom, England, June 4.—An unidentified woman, supposedly a militant suffragette, was killed this afternoon at the Epsom Downs Derby when she ran out on the course at Tattenham Corner and grasped Anmer, the King's entry, by the bridle. The animal reared and then horse and rider, Jockey Jones, fell.

The woman was caught beneath the falling horse and fatally crushed. Jones was severely hurt and was rushed in an ambulance to a hospital, where it was said his condition was serious. The King's horse was not injured to any extent.

Militants at the Woman's Social and Political Union headquarters tonight asserted that they knew nothing about the supposed suffragette who was killed when she interfered with the King's horse at the Derby this afternoon. She has not yet been identified.

His Majesty was very much affected when he learned of the tragic sequel to his horse's tardiness in reaching the finishing post. Anmer finished the race riderless.

ABOYEUR WON ENGLISH DERBY CRAGANOUR DISQUALIFIED

Favorite Finished First in World's Greatest Flat Race, But Bumped in the Stretch--Long Shot Placed First

Epsom, June 4.—A. P. Cunliffe's Aboyeur, with the betting 100 to 1 against him was awarded first place to-day in the Derby, the chief sporting event of the British turf, after his jockey had raised an objection for bumping, and was sustained by the stewards against Craganour, the favorite, who ran first past the winning post. Second and third places were given to W. Raphael's Louvois, and W. Hall Walker's Great Sport, while the French horse Nimbus was placed fourth. Of the 345 original entries for the stakes of $32,500, only 15 participated in the race. The time of Sraganour for the mile and a half was two minutes 37 3-5 seconds. There was only a head between Craganour and Aboyeur, and a neck between Aboyeur and Louvois.

PRECEDENT BROKEN.

To-day's race for the Derby was destined to break two long-standing precedents. There was no American-owned horse among the starters and there was no "odds-on" favorite for the classic event.

Neither of these facts acted as a deterrent, for visitors from across the Atlantic flocked to the course in thousands, and the fact that there was no outstanding favorite had the effect, if anything, of adding to the crowd of citizens of London, who came to witness the running for their interest had been aroused by the openness of the race and many of them came in order to place their money on outside chances.

GREAT CROWD.

The weather was perfect this morning and all routes leading from London to the historic Epsom Downs were crowded from the earliest hour. Thousands had come by road, on foot, in carriages, cabs, automobiles or other wheeled vehicles. The means of getting to the course which is only fourteen miles from London, have been greatly improved in recent years and the automobile has become the favorite method of reaching the open expanse of Epsom Downs, on which the track is laid and to which entrance is free for all. Even the unweildy motor 'bus found its place to-day in the constant stream of vehicles reaching the Downs.

King George and Queen Mary were unable to attend the opening meeting yesterday, owing to the official celebration of the King's birthday.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 25c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 2c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 25c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 3[illegible] George St., directly opposite Crossman's store.

FUTURE OF CANADA

Sir Edmund Walker's Optimism Before New York Canadian Club.

Sir Edmund Walker, addressing the Canadian Club of New York, described Canada as "A nation with its face clearly set towards its goal." He added: "Let us turn for a moment to some of the details of our national life. For many years we have been enjoying an extraordinary prosperity. This is largely due to an immigration which exceeds in the proportion of the newcomer to those already in the country anything ever known before. This proportion is about five immigrants per year to each hundred already in Canada. If that scale is applied to the United States, you will realize that our problem of assimilation, of transportation, of land preparation and of housing, is greater by far than the United States has ever had to confront. In the enormous cost of harnessing the country for this ever-growing army of settlers, the savings of the Canadian people, now very large, are quickly absorbed, and, in addition, we are among the largest borrowers in the London market. We need at the moment, in addition to our own savings, over $200,000,000 annually for material development, and we get almost all of it from the dear old mother, who now ranks us first in credit among the borrowing nations for whom she acts as banker.

"Without this stream of new capital, the stream of immigration would be greatly lessened, but unless we have a widespread European war I do not believe it will be checked except temporarily when the younger son asks too much from the indulgent mother, and thus justifies reproof. It looks as if on the material side we shall continue to prosper, and it behooves us to see that in this widespread prosperity the loaves and fishes are so divided that national harmony and not discord is the result. We are endeavoring to build up an industrial community of the same kind as that of the United States or Great Britain. We do not wish to be merely an agricultural or merely a manufacturing people, either in the east or in the west. Today the west is, naturally, mostly agricultural and pastoral, and it is served mostly by the eastern manufacturer.

"We can already, however, see the beginning of manufacturing in the west, and we shall rapidly repeat the history of many western cities in the United States, which in one generation from mere markets for farm produce developed into busy manufacturing centres. Until this time arrives we must by frequent conference and frank argument maintain as fair relations as are possible. All must pay their share in supporting the cost of government, including that part in harnessing the country which falls upon the government, and cannot be accomplished by private enterprise."

WITH BULL TERRIERS IN THE FIGHTING DAYS

A Graphic Story of a Sport Which Fortunately Long Since Passed Into History.

Let us, in fancy, go back fifty years or so. We shall, if we want to see the origin of a match, visit a locality not renowned for the peaceable character of the inhabitants. In the bar there is an animated discussion going on. Billy something or other is arguing the point with Nobby So-and So, in language piquant and lurid, and the point at issue, of course, is the fighting capabilities of his "dorg" as compared with those of Nobby's tyke. The result of the debate is a challenge to a match, and this is accepted. Stakes are decided on the spot, and deposited with mine host, a fighting weight is named, and a date fixed for the meeting. A couple of weeks is devoted to developing every detail in the bull terrier's anatomy that makes for strength and endurance and when the fateful morning arrives there is, in a secluded suburb, as al a foregathering of low-life sportsmen as one could imagine. Here a ring is marked off and a line drawn across the centre. By the spin of the coin choice of positions is decided. The dogs are held by their owners facing each other at the edge of the ring, and the loser of the toss at the command of the referee lets his terrier go. All present joined in urging the dogs on and directly the first dog to be let loose reached the line the other was let go.

Pandemonium.

Then at it they went, and the men were very soon as excited as the dogs and almost as eager to be at each other's throats. Odds were laid with reckless desperation on this or that one, and pandemonium reigned as the dogs twisted and turned in their fury, seeking to get a vital grip. But they generally knew their business, and being trained to perfection and as active as squirrels, defended their vitals with consummate skill. When time was called, the owners jumped forward, waited for a favourable moment, and then snatched up their dogs and took them back to their places for sponging and rubbing down.

Round after round was fought in this way, the dogs being loosened first in turn. As the fight progressed nature, of course, exacted her penalty for such fierce and desperate exertion. They were, however, still game, and though strength was failing, they struggled up to the line and sought to tear the life out of each other.

Two hours, perhaps, had passed since this dreadful scene, which has soiled the good name of sport, was started, and both dogs have for some time been hard put to crawl out to the combat. Then, when the referee calls time, the dog whose turn it is to be let go first does not move.

Perhaps it is physically incapable; perhaps its great heart has broken; or perchance it has done what any man or beast might do with honour, acknowledged defeat. At any rate, it fails to reach the line, and the other is proclaimed the winner.

The End of a Brutal Custom.

Instantly the humans take up the song. Yells of delight come from the winner's backers; hats are thrown into the air and every means of demonstrating supreme satisfaction is adopted. The loser's backers are in a surly mood, and it needs very little for the rival functions to start where the terriers had left off. Terrible scenes have been enacted upon these green fields on Sabbath morns during the sixties and seventies.

And what of the winning dog? His owner does not, curiously enough, share in the jubilation of his friends. He is on his knees administering all the restorative tricks that long experience of the business has taught him. But the terrier still lies on the green, and by and bye it is realized that he is dead. His breath maybe had left his body before the other dog had been told to go, and the match had actually been won by a dead dog.

This barbarous custom, like many others that flourished in what some are pleased to call "the good old days," is gone, never to return. Bull terriers are getting popular again, but for a very different reason. They are staunch friends, and so are finding their way into the hearts and the homes of the people.—Leigh Woods, in The Birmingham Post.

SOWING HIS WILD OATS
REAPING A HARVEST OF SORROW

How many young men can look back on their early life and regret their misdeeds. "Sowing their wild oats" in various ways. Excesses, violation of nature's laws, "wine, women and song"—all have their victims. You have reformed but what about the seed you have sown—what about the harvest? Don't trust to luck. If you are at present within the clutches of any secret habit which is sapping your life by degrees; if you are suffering from the results of past indiscretions; if your blood has been tainted from any private disease and you dare not marry; if you are married and live in dread of symptoms breaking out and exposing your past; if you are suffering as the result of a misspent life—DRS. DEATH HAS NO TERRORS.

The remarkable feature of the case of B. Sanders, an American banker, was the composure with which he faced death unintentionally swallowing poison. Throughout a week the doomed man talked calmly about his condition, and just before passing into a state of coma which ended in death, he said: "If this is death, then none need fear its terrors."

He was, indeed, dyeing, and had been dyeing for a week; but the process of dissolution was not attended by any of the terrors generally associated with the thought of death. For this reason his testimony ought to be gratifying to many thousands of men and women who could not bring themselves to believe similar declarations by medical scientists and others who have studied life and death together with all their phenomena.

The case of Mr. Sanders however, is proof that nature prepares both mind and body for the final event in human existence, so that the dying pass away without fear of the change. There are exceptions of course, as there are to every rule but it is now demonstrated by actual experience and by scientific investigation that death is not the terrible thing, physically and mentally, that it is generally thought to be.

Offensive Breath Caused Usually By Catarrh

Simple Remedy Discovered That Cures Without Drugs.

The American people suffer more from Catarrh than from any other disease. It undermines more constitutions and creates more sickness than all other diseases combined. It is, therefore, very dangerous.

You can't successfully treat catarrh by internal dosing—you must in some way send a purifying, healing agent through the breathing organs so that the germs can be reached. This you do every time you inhale Catarrhozone. Its rich essences and healing balsams are breathed all through the nose, throat and lungs and effectively destroy every trace of Catarrh. This is a proven fact.

I endorse Catarrhozone because I know of six bad cases of Catarrh, including my own, that it has cured. It is a sensible remedy because it is capable of going where the disease is. I believe it cures quicker than other remedy because it gets sooner to the source of the disease than anything else I know of. I had headaches, bad breath and much stomach trouble associated with my Catarrh, but they have disappeared since using Catarrhozone, which keeps me free from colds, headaches, catarrh and all winter ills." OTTO E. KRAMER. Belleville, Ont.

Catarrhozone is needed in every home. Large size lasts 2 months price $1.00; small size 50c; trial size 25c. At all storekeepers and druggists or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y. and Kingston, Canada

A MARTYR TO CARPET BEATING.

'All housewives will please take notice that William Brandol, of Nutley N. J., is dead, and that house-cleaning drove him to a suicide's grave. His wife made him beat carpets all day, after which he sat down and wrote a good-by letter to her, in which he said: "I hope my death will lead you to give up the habit of house-cleaning every time you hear a robin sing."

William, however, did not leave this vale of tears in anger or in wrath, but from all accounts, with philosophical acceptance of death as something decidedly better than beating carpets in the warm sunshine, and, in order that he might not pass away thinking of carpets he first ate a hearty dinner of salt pork and dandelion greens.

Some idea of the horror of carpet beating is obtainable from the fact that a quiet man on a bright spring day, when the birds are singing and the flowers are blooming, will desert the wife of his bosom for the cold embrace of death. Many a woman, no doubt, makes her husband beat carpets, little realizing that thereby she may be inviting the trials and tribulations of widowhood; hence, believing that most women would rather not have it on their consciences that they had driven a man to death we have taken the liberty of presenting the tragic case of the unhappy Brandol family.

THE QUESTION OF TITLE.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—Some time ago I tried to buy a certain house from a man in the city. He agreed to sell but could not give me a clear title. I spent considerable time and money to get the title as I wanted the property. I even paid a sum of money down to bind the bargain. Where do I stand.

Mrs. G.

Reply—If a person has agreed to purchase property and finds that the vendor cannot give title, the purchaser may recover back the deposit with interest and her costs in investigating the title.

HIGH SALARIES IN SPORT

A Glance at the Large Amount Some Players Get.

Chance, manager of the New York ball team, recives $25,000 a year, the highest salary ever offered to a ball player. Another baseball player, named Bresnahan, signed a contract at $10,000 a year for the St. Louis team, but after serving a year the owners decided to get rid of him. In order to break the contract, which had been made for four years, it was necessary to pay Bresnahan $20,000. That is to say, he recived $30,000 from the St. Louis club for services that did not extend over more than six months. The Chicago club that dismissed Chance offered him $6,500 a year and in addition paid him $10,000 for signing a contract. The New York Telegraph calculates that Bresnahan received $46,000 for his baseball services, which did not extendd over eight months. Close figuring would show that in these eighteen months Bresnahan would not work more than five hours a day. It is doubtful if any man ever made so much money out of sport in so short a time. Pitre, the celebrated hockey player, of the Canadien Club receives $3,000 a year. He plays twenty games which is at the rate of $150 a game. Billy Fitzgerald, the great home player of the Toronto Lacrosse Club, received $4,000 for twelve games; so that if the time occupied be taken into consideration it will be seen that Canadian lacrosse and hockey players are still the highest paid atheletes in the world.

A CURIOUS TRAVELLER

Wasted His Money in Aimless Jaunts Till Police Got Him

Robert Morrow, of Bath, Ont., fifty years of age, was taken off a train and arrested on a charge of insanity at Hamilton. On him was found $90 in cash and a bank book showing deposits amounting to $23,242. For a week he had been wasting his substance by riding on trains all over the Province. He refused to buy through tickets or to get tickets from a station agent, but insisted on purchasing them from conductors, and those good only to the next station. His favorite ride was from Niagara Falls to Toronto, and he bought tickets from the conductors for each station on the route as he came to it. The result was that he had his pockets crammed with slips calling for rebates.

COMING TO CANADA

Loose Methods of Racing Across Border Sending Horses Northward

The American thoroughbred industry seems to have been shot to pieces. There are statistics that in the states of Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia where the thoroughbred formerly flourished, there are not enough thoroughbred race horses left to make it worth talking about. And this state of affairs has been brought about entirely by the loose methods of conducting race track meetings and the consequent strenuous reform measures. There is no immediate indication that the thoroughbred will amount to anything very much in the near future in the United States. What horses of the breeding classes there are left are gradually finding their way to Canada. They find their way into the hands of Canadian owners and their progeny will be raced as Canadian breds. And chances are, that by the time the racing laws of the United States have been remodelled the Americans will have to look to Canada for their horses, and much good money for the Canadian owner should be the result.

TURF.

New York, June 4.—"There will be no betting on the race tracks this year, according to a letter sent Arthur Brisbane by Governor Sulzer. The governor declares that he has notified the authorities to see that the law is enforced.

'Tis said that all the glories of the turf returned as if by magic with the revival of horse racing at Belmont Park. It has been three years since the flag fell, but Saturday there was a splendid turnout of fair, well-tailored women and well-groomed men, who welcomed an opportunity to chat with one's neighbor down at the most picturesque course in America.

The old Knickerbocker families took an afternoon off. In fact, there has not been such an outpouring of smart-setters since the Dook o' Westminster sent his blooming polo players across the pond a couple of seasons ago.

Be that as it may, we venture to say without feat of contradiction, that they cannot parade a better lot of good looking women than may be seen at Canadian races during the course of a spring meeting.

RING.

The summer season, vaudeville engagements rather scarce, Willie Ritchie, lightweight champion of the world, will meet Joe Rivers on July 4. The making of this match isn't going to surprise those who take an observation at the commercialized gentry in the ring to-day. Nine out of every ten persons anticipated the two boys signing articles, and now that Eddie Granny has landed the match, both will start training with the ultimate view of splitting something like $25,000 for twenty rounds of boxing.

The scrap, regardless of the monetary consideration, will determine whether Ritchie is an 18-karat champion. Like Bat Nelson when he blew the title, Ad Wolgast doesn't think his conqueror is the man to be dubbed "king" of the 133-pounders. It is up, or it will be up to Ritchie to disprove the statement, for in Rivers he meets by far the best lightweight aspiring for his title.

New York, June 4.—The more the unfortunate McCarty-Pelkey affair is talked over the more impossible it seems that the accident could have happened in the way described. A jab by Pelkey is said to have dislocated McCarty's neck, tearing the spinal cord. Pelkey never has been noted for his hard jab. There is no other case on record where a jab has produced serious results.

The boxers wore eight-ounce gloves, twice as heavily padded as the usual five ounce gloves. They were the kind of gloves usually worn in practice bouts and referred to as "pillows."

After the hard jab that drove him back for a moment, according to the accounts, McCarty winced, then smiled, then responded with another rush, meanwhile turning his head toward his corner and winking at his seconds as he dropped his hands into position to use an uppercut. In the mixup McCarty delivered blows and received a short-arm blow on the ribs, and a few seconds later staggered back and dropped without being hit again. He bent forward slowly as if assuming a crouching position, then fell face downward and slid easily out to full length on the floor.

Perhaps physicians can explain how a boxer with a dislocated neck and injured spinal cord can turn and wink at his seconds and step about quickly for half a minute and deliver two or three blows.

However, the main thing remains: McCarty entered the ring fit and strong. Sometime within a couple of minutes after the beginning o the first round he collapsed and within a quarter of an hour later was taken out of the ring dead.

It is an unexplainable accident. Morally Pelkey is not at fault. He had no idea of injuring McCarty, much less of killing him. Sometimes we hear of a man stepping from a six-inch curb and breaking his leg, or two cars bump unexpectedly and some one's head goes back with a snap, breaking the neck. The McCarty accident was of a similar nature—the last in the world to be expected.

Living, in or out of the ring, is a precarious proposition.

IN THE CANOE

Where the canoe first came into being is a hard thing to say. It is almost as old as anything used by civilized man. We find them in use in almost every country where the primitive man is still to be found. In the far north you will find the Indian with his canoe, or if you go to Central Africa you still find the canoe. It seems to have been the first method of travel that man invented. Although the modern canoe has very few points that are the same as the old style canoe, yet in principle it is the same. Canada is the home of the canoe if we take the birch bark as the father of all American canoes and eastern Canada is the home of the new style canoe. Without doubt the two best known makes in Canada are the Chestnut and the Peterborough. It is almost impossible to give any man instructions in canoeing, other than to tell him to get a first-class man to go out with him. A few general rules can be given, but all canoemen are not agreed on these. The paddle should be the height of the user, say the Cree Indians, and about seven inches wide. Another thing that the Crees claim is that a man can paddle much farther if he does not bend his elbows and swings his paddle from the shoulders. Mr. R. C. Hall, the well-known racer, always bends the elbow on the recover and does not dig with the paddle, a great fault of many racers. Mr. Hall's advice to the beginner is: "First, learn to handle a paddle right and use it slowly until you are able to use it no other way than the right way; then try to get speed."

Health and Beauty Helps

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN.

Clara: I know parnotis will greatly reduce your weight, and when this is done you will feel much better and healthier. To prepare the treatment get from your druggist 4 ounces parnotis and dissolve in 1½ pints hot water, then take a tablespoonful at meal time. This acts gradually and gently and safely reduces weight without resorting to violent exercise or dieting. This treatment is far superior to any "patent" fat-reducer, for the reason that the graceful lines of the figure are regained and the flesh and skin are left firm and smooth.

Alma: Beautiful eyebrows and lashes will add greatly to the expression of your eyes. Rubbing pyroxin on eyebrowd will make them grow thick and beautiful, and frequent applications of pyroxin at lash-roots with thumb and forefinger will cause them to come in long and curly. Use care and don't get any pyroxin where hair is not wanted.

Anxious: This is the only safe, certain hair-remover: Mix into a paste enought delatone and water to cover the hairy surface, apply and in 2 or 3 minutes rub off, cleanse the skin and the hairs will have vanished. Rarely is the second application necessary to remove even a stubborn growth.

Genevieve: You can easily and quickly cleanse your hair and scalp with canthrox, and the shampoo is so refreshing and invigorating that you will never again use or permit the use of soap or other mussy, harmful mixtures for this purpose. Just dissolve a teaspoonful canthrox in a cupful of hot water and your shampoo is ready. After rinsing the hair will dry very quickly and take on a rich, even color and beautiful gloss. Canthrox is especially nice for hot weather shampoos, because it stimulates and invigorates the scalp's tissues and makes the head feel so exhilarated.

Auntie: Yes, that old-fashioned kardene tonic will do you a great amount of good, I am sure. Here is the recipe: To prepare, add 1 ounce kardene to ½ pint alcohol (whiskey should not be used), then ½ cupful sugar and hot water to make a quart. Take a tablespoonful before each meal and you will be surprised how quickly your strength and appetite return. The kardene tonic is fine for any kidney or liver trouble, and will clear the skin of sallowness, blotches, pimples and other complexion faults, as well as make you weigh exactly what you should.

Minnie: You should use a crystos eye-tonic as it is very soothing and restful to tired, aching eye-muscles. This tonic is made at small cost by dissolving 1 ounce crystos in 1 pint clear water and 2 or 3 drops of this should be put in the bothersome eye until a cure is affected. The crystos eye-tonic is strengthening to weak, watery eyes and gives to them a delightful sparkle and youthful expression. With the aid of the crystos eye tonic it is frequently possible to discard glasses.

Lucy: Nature exacts heavy tolls when her laws are violated. Your skin has been abused by powder. An ordinary spurmax lotion, made by dissolving 4 ounces spurmax in ½ pint witch hazel or hot water, into which is stirred 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine, is far superior to powder when on and seems part of the skin, and its use will give a rose-blush and velvety smoothness to any complexion. I can highly recommend the spurmax lotion for clearing the skin of all complexion disfigurements and bringing back the healthy glow of youth to the aged, weather-marred or powder-ruined skin.

Jennie: No, quinzoin hair-tonic can not possibly injure the hair. Quinzoin itself is the most beneficial remedy of which I know for all hair and scalp-troubles, and when it is made up according to my simple directions is better than any hair-tonic you ever used. To prepare, just add 1 ounce quinzoin to ½ pint alcohol, then pour in ½ pint water. This inexpensive tonic stops the irritation almost instantly and its use will banish dandruff and make your scalp healthy. Then a beautiful growth of long, silken hair will follow.

Annice: Make your own greaseless cream-jelly wrinkle-remover at little cost by pouring 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine into ½ pint cold water, then adding 1 ounce almozoin. Let dissolve thoroughly before using, apply thickly and leave over night. Then apply more cream and massage skin until the cream-jelly disappears. This is splendid for correcting every faulty complexion because it gives natural beauty and I have found that certain results follow when this almozoin cream-jelly is used to banish wrinkles and round out hollows.

MOTOR BIKE REAR SEAT

Comfortable Seat, With Back, Attaches to Rear of Wheel

It is a selfish motorcyclist these days who does not take somebody with him on his pleasure jaunts. It may be his wife, it may be the baby or it may be the girl he is hoping to make his wife. If it is the baby, the infant is carried in a basket-like contrivance that hangs over the handlebar. If it is some person old enough to take care of herself she occupies a seat over the rear wheel. A Colorado man has invented what he claims is an improvement over the rear seats used heretofore. The cut shows the general construction of this seat, with its padded bottom and back, but the chief virtue lies in the spring mechanism. The rods under the center of the seat lead into tubes that have a short coiled spring at the bottom and act as shock absorbers.

INNOVATION FOR OARSMEN

Their Defects Will Be Shown Them by Cinematograph.

English rowing men are to spring an innovation in the coaching line. According to a letter in the London Field, the cinematograph will be used to take moving pictures of the important crews, not for public exhibition purposes, but to demonstrate to each man his individual faults. Moving pictures will show every little and big fault from beginning to end, if the moving-picture machine be worked slowly. Thus every oarsman, literally, will be able to see himself as others see him and the coach's task will be very much lighter. Incidentally, it will diminish the self-esteem of many of the oarsmen, which in itself will be salutary. The moving pictures also will show whether a crew is rowing synchronously, i.e., whether each part of each man's stroke is in exact time with those of all the other men in the boat—whether they are "together." And this is a paramount factor in attaining speed.

Advice.

"Don't eat that stuff," the doctor said,
"Or you will soon be with the dead!"
But when the doctor had his say
The patient ate it anyway—
And he's living yet.

"Don't buy that run-down business, friend,
Or your career will shortly end!"
Thus spoke the man who'd have his say;
The fool bought his headstrong way—
And now he's rich.

"They can't put you in jail for that!"
Exclaimed the lawyer, sleek and fat;
The man in prison groaned a groan,
And the lawyer man left him alone—
He's still in jail.

Tests by French naval officers have indicated that the waves in wireless telegraphy travel at a rate of nearly 200,000 miles a second.

A JEALOUS SPORTSMAN

Elderly Husband Was Not to be Outdone by Youthful Beaus

Some men follow sport for sheer love of it; others are driven to it as the following story will show:—

A Birmingham gentleman, 60 years old and white haired, went to one of the public swimming baths in his city and made enquiries regarding swimming lessons. He confessed that even at his age he had made up his mind to acquire the art. He entered upon his course of instruction with enthusiasm and vigor. None the less, he was a mystery to his instructor and friends, until one day, in a burst of confidence, he enlightened them. He had, it appeared, only a short time before married a young wife. They had gone to the seaside, and the wife, who was an able swimmer, regularly took her morning dip in the waves, and was generally attended by several young natatory cavaliers. The aged, non-swimming husband, left alone on the shore, was frankly jealous. He felt he was on his mettle; and so, unkonwn to his wife, he commenced to learn the art.

HIS LITTLE LAMB

A Toronto travelling man was married and was given a month's vacation. He and his bride had been passing their honeymoon at Atlantic City.

As they entered the dining room and sat down as usual, in a secluded corner, the young husband noticed a good customer at the table near by.

"Say, dearest," he whispered, "there's Mr. Jones over there. You won't mind if I go over and dine with him, will you? Think how fine it will be if I get back from my weddng trip with a smashing big order."

The little bride agreed, rather ruefully. Her traveling man hurried over to Jones and shook hands with him and ordered his dinner, which included roast lamb. Then he began to talk business.

He was so earnest about it that he didn't notice that the waiter removed his meat dishes and placed a dessert before him. Then suddenly he looked down at his plate and exclaimed:

"Why, where's my lamb?"

A little voice in the corner piped out, "Here I am, dear!"

Carmangay

"The Star of Alberta"

PAST The splendidly strategic site of Carmangay was discovered by a far seeing, shrewd railway engineer attracted to the district by the lure of the finest wheat in the Canadian West. He snapped up lands where the wide canyons of the Little Bow River narrows to a point. Here must all railways cross. The C. P. R. came and the shipping centre created went ahead by leaps and bounds.

PRESENT Carmangay today is a thriving incorporated town, with not less than 53 business places. Her up-to-date electric and natural water supply systems are owned and operated by the people. Carmangay boasts an eight-roomed schoolhouse, two banks and four big elevators, shipping over a million bushels in 1911 and 1½ millions in 1912. Carmangay has coal mines operating, and the entire district is underlaid with coal of finest Galt quality.

FUTURE Carmangay grows as Alberta grows. That means a wonderful future. Four new railroads are heading for Carmangay. Four new elevators are trying to cope with the tremendous wheat yields of the district. The mines are opening up splendid prospects. Carmangay is being rapidly developed into one of the greatest towns in the Canadian West. YOU can just as confidently invest in Carmangay as her own people do, who are building in brick and stone for a tremendous future. Carmangay has her own supply of finest brick clay and stone right at her doors, and will soon supply her sister cities in Alberta.

TENDERS FOR DREDGING

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Dredging, Port Arthur, Ontario," will be received until 4.00 P.M., on Friday, June 13, 1913, for dredging required at Port Arthur, Ont.

Tenders will not be considered unless made on the forms supplied, and signed with the actual signatures of the tenderers.

Combined specification and form of tender can be obtained on application to the Secretary, Department of Public Works, Ottawa. Tenders must include the towing of the plant to and from the work. Dredges and tugs not owned and registered in Canada shall not be employed in the performance of the work contracted for. Contractors must be ready to begin work within thirty days after the date they have been notified of the acceptance of their tender.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, for five per cent (5 p.c.) of the contract price, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,

LITTLE GRAY LADY

Why the Oldest Boarder Left Her Little, Half Bare, Top Story Room.

BY HUBERT PAUL.

The Little Gray Lady had left our boarding house!

It was all the more astonishing because she had lived there, so Mrs. Potter said, for fourteen years. She had occupied that little half bare room of hers on the top story nearly all of that time. When she had come, most of us young fellows had been children playing Indians and making mud puddings. Nobody had thought that she would ever leave. She went out every morning at 8:30 to her work—she was cashier in some office downtown—and came back promptly at six; she had no friends; she never went out in the evening. Some of us, taking pity on the lonely little middle-aged spinster, had sought her friendship, but she had always amiably and politely discouraged us.

We looked at each other in astonishment that evening at the dinner table when Mrs. Potter told us. No, the Little Gray Lady had given no explanation. She had merely said, very sweetly, that she was going away, had packed her trunk and gone, giving some address in a modest uptown street. Mrs. Potter had hoped that she might be permitted to call. The Little Gray Lady had evaded the proposition with the adroitness born of fourteen years of evasion of all personal matters. Then she had driven away in a cab, and that was the only thing that had seemed unusual in the manner of her going. For the Little Gray Lady was not given to cabs.

"Perhaps she's gone to get married," suggested Parsons, a shock-haired youth, who sat at Mrs. Potter's right.

"Mr. Parsons, there isn't any man worthy of her," said Mrs. Potter severely, and to that he heartily agreed. For everybody had loved the quiet, modest, kind-hearted little spinster who sat so demurely at our table and lived so unassumingly. I think we all felt a sense of personal loss.

Through the Crowd a Little Woman Pushed Her Way.

I remember that night vividly, for we were all engrossed by the news that Governor Cowper had pardoned Melchior Jetley, the famous murderer, who had formed the text for innumerable discussions at debating societies during the period of his imprisonment. Everybody knew about Jetley; but since it is some years since his release the story may have faded out of the public mind, so I will briefly record it. Jetley had served seventeen years for the murder of Sam Briggs. It was a deliberate, premeditated, cold-blooded murder. Jetley was a racing man, and Sam Briggs was his partner. Jetley had recently married a very charming woman, the daughter of a fashionable clergyman of our town. Their short married life was singularly happy. Jetley abandoned his old habits and associates, settled down, reformed and went into business. Sam Briggs, his partner, followed suit and became his partner in business likewise. They had been married about eighteen months when Jetley was called west on business. Somebody—some busybody—sent him a telegram which brought him back in a hurry. He went home; Mrs. Jetley was not there. The scared maid told him she had gone to Kling's restaurant, frequented by a rather flashy, "sporty" set. Jetley went there in a hansom, entered, saw his wife seated at a table with Sam Briggs, drinking a cocktail. Jetley pulled out a revolver and shot Briggs dead.

He was tried, sentenced to death, and had his punishment commuted to imprisonment for life. After seventeen years Governor Cowper pardoned him. And the imprisonment, and the pardon, too, divided society into two hotly antagonistic camps. Some maintained that he should have been sent to the chair—or gallows, rather, for hanging was then the legal method of execution. Others demanded that he be freed. During the whole seventeen years the agitation continued. No doubt old-timers argue on the matter yet, as we did on that evening.

"Look at it this way," said Parsons. "The man shot a fellow man in cold blood. The law prescribes a penalty for murder. It should have been enacted."

I maintained that it was every man's duty to defend his home. We were divided half and half.

"I don't believe the taking of life is ever justified," put in Cranborne, our Socialist boarder. "Jetley was the victim of his environment. How many of us would not have done the same? Besides, did you fellows ever stop to think that he may have had loved ones who would suffer more than he by his death?"

"You're a sentimentalist," sneered Parsons. "Who cares for a murderer serving a life sentence?"

"Somebody may have cared! His wife!"

"Good Lord, Cranborne, do you suppose she cared what happened to him, or he what happened to her? You treat those criminals as though they were actuated by the same emotions as ordinary people. Why, society is well rid of them. Kill the man and drive the woman out of society and you'll improve the world better than by any crazy theories which don't accord with facts."

"I'd like to take a look at Jetley when he arrives at the station tomorrow," said Parsons. "The papers say he'll come down on the 2:42. I guess there'll be a mob of sightseers."

"Yes, ready to mob him," said Cranborne.

"Stuff!" said Parsons. "They'll carry him shoulder high. The mob always applauds the wrongdoer."

"Well," I interposed, "let's go and see." I think, but am not positive, that somebody laid a bet that Jetley would swagger through the crowd like a triumphant baseball star. Somebody else expected to see a broken criminal, creeping back hopelessly to the world of men. Anyway, we were all curious.

The train came in half an hour late. We were jammed into the heart of a huge throng that blocked the entire station. On the outskirts a force of police attempted vainly to clear a passage. The train slowed down; the passengers descended and stood gazing helplessly about them. Nobody could move a yard.

Suddenly shouts went up. "That's him!" they yelled, "that's him!" And they surged forward and about him, and neither cheered nor hooted, but stared open-mouthed at a middle-aged, tired, bowed, unhappy man in a suit of dark serge, carrying a cheap new suit-case.

Then through the crowd a little woman pushed her way, forcing aside the strongest men by some superhumanly endowed strength. She went up to the tired man and put her arms round his neck and kissed him, and the tired man dropped his bag and stared at her and said something softly and then covered his face with his hands; and I was near enough to see the tears trickling between his fingers. And the woman was the Little Gray Lady!

That's all I know. That's all I can tell, and I don't know who she was—although I know her name, which wasn't that of his wife, but may have been assumed. I'm only recording what I saw before the police pushed us away, and the tired man and the Little Gray Lady disappeared from our sight for ever. But there was a look of forgiveness and of love on both their faces that kept me quiet that night at the table, although Cranborne and Parsons engaged in a pretty stiff argument.

MAKE DEATH EASIER

Maeterlinck Thinks That Doctors Needlessly Prolong Life

In a remarkable book on death, Maurice Maeterlinck attacks medical science for its efforts to prolong the life of a person doomed to death.

"All our knowledge," he says, "only renders the death of human beings more painful than that of animals, who know nothing. Doctors say in the present state of science that there is never a certainty of death, with a few exceptions. Not to maintain life until the last limits, even at the price of insupportable agony, is perhaps to kill. The present idea is that the worst tortures are not in vain if a partial existence is prolonged a few days. To cheat death one hour is regarded as worth a life of pain."

M. Maeterlinck adds that the doctors, however, are coming to agreement on the advisability, when there is no longer a chance of saving life, of softening pain in the last moments.

"It is not death," he says, "that attacks life, but life that outrageously resists death. Perhaps one day medical science will allow death to come surely and silently when life's course is run. When the doctor and patient know what they ought to know there will be no physical or metaphysical reason why the coming of death shall not be as comforting as sleep."

M. Maeterlinck says it is surprising that death, which ought to be the most perfect and luminous of ideas, since it is the thing most inevitable, should be most kept in the background because of the world's groveling fear thereof.

"All the terrible agony we impute to the last fatal moment," he says, "does not naturally belong to death. This supreme suffering is lengthened in proportion to the advance of science. All doctors believe that it is their first duty to prolong as far as possible the most atrocious convulsions of the death agony. Who at a deathbed, has not wished to throw himself at the doctor's feet, and demand mercy for the dying, without daring to do so. The doctors are so convinced of their duty that pity and reason are blinded in fulfilment of the highest and most revered [illegible] of the human conscience."

Tired of Hangman's Job

Arthur Ellis, Canada's executioner, declared after he hanged an Italian named Battista in the Montreal jail yard, that there is not a living in his job and that he is going to quit it unless the Dominion Government restores the retainer of $750 a year allowed Ratcliffe.

Ellis receives only the fees paid him by Sheriffs, and out of eight executions he received less than $600.

The Strength of Ice.

Experiments by French army officers have shown that ice an inch and three-fifths thick will bear the weight of a man; four and three-quarter inch ice light artillery, and eleven and one half inch ice the heaviest weights the transportation of an army requires.

To Protect Firemen.

For emergency use by firemen there has been invented a fire and waterproof hood, which can be carried in a coat pocket, yet when opened and fastened around the neck will give its wearer fresh air enough to last him ten or fifteen minutes.

CHOICE OF AWARD

Old Man's Peculiar Will Develops Good and Bad Traits of Nephews.

BY GEORGE ELMER COBB.

"And I hereby bequeath and devise to my nephews, Ralph Davis and Jonas Greer, the house on Main street and the house on Railroad street, my trustees to make the choice of awarding the same."

The lawyer read this extract from the will of old Peter Davis in a singsong tone. There was a long sigh of relief from Jonas Greer, and a pleased expression on the face of Ralph Davis. Good old Uncle Peter had not forgotten them, even if he had given a goodly portion of his worldly goods to charity.

"Further," the lawyer continued his reading, "the first one of said nephews making five thousand dollars, the same shall be received in full payment for the old homestead."

There was due speculation among the gossips of Brandon for a week after that, as to which of the fortunate heirs of old Peter Davis would receive the best property award.

The place on Main street was the choice of the two residences. The house was modern, the neighbors were of the best social set in the village, the street was paved. The Railroad street place held a neat but old-fashioned cottage. Main street was a broad tree-fringed thoroughfare. Railroad street had half of its area taken up by tracks, sidings and freight houses. The Greers had no children. There were two pretty, curly headed tots in the Davis family.

After thinking and debating over the matter at the end of a week the trustees of the Davis estate awarded the Main street property to the Greers.

"It's a burning shame, Ralph!" said outspoken Mrs. Davis. "There is no right or justice to it. Everybody knows it, everybody is scandalized."

"Oh, we're property owners now, and shouldn't complain," reminded her husband in a pleasant way.

"But think of it—the Greers have no children, and we have. It is dangerous for them so near the railroad tracks. Besides that, this property isn't worth half as much as the Main street place."

"Here is a Little Paper to Sign."

"Well," rejoined Ralph, "I understand that John Moore, one of the trustees, is wearing a new diamond pin, and they say that Greer presented it to him. Let it go. When I look around and see how cozy you've made the place here, I feel as if it is a kind of palace."

"Oh, Ralph, you are so easily satisfied," sighed Mrs. Davis.

"That's because I've got what Greer can't scheme for and get."

"What's that?"

"You and the children," cried the big hearted fellow, and his wife returned his bounding kiss with a proud and happy face.

"I suppose the next thing we know," she said, "Greer will scheme to get the fifty thousand dollar homestead for that five thousand dollars. He'll raise it among his friends."

"No, he can't do that," dissented Ralph. "He has to make it. I'll let you into a secret, Madge, dear: I am going to work and saving and save to raise that money. The Greers won't. They are going in for society in their new home. Sort of look down on us back street folks. So, they spend all they get."

Ralph's loyal little wife had a good deal of humiliation to subdue for a time. Mrs. Greer began to take to herself a certain social importance. People who were once ignored the back street home. The yards of the two houses adjoined at the rear. First Mrs. Greer pitied her humbler neighbor. Then she was indulgent. Finally she ignored her. Ralph worked hard. His life was centered in his home, and his sterling, steadfast faith in the future began to influence his wife. One day he came home in the middle of the day. This was an unusual thing for him. His wife looked alarmed and then curious, for her husband's cheery face was wreathed with smiles.

"Well, I reckon we'll have to move," he announced.

"Move! When? Why?" cried his bewildered helpmate with a gasp.

"Right away, and because our house here is sold."

"Sold!"

"That's right," smiled Ralph, and he [illegible] and looked as if supremely satisfied with the arrangement. "Here is a little paper to sign," and the speaker produced an official looking document.

"[illegible] is buying it?" [illegible] the bewildered wife.

"The railroad company. If we hold back, the property will be condemned anyway, so we had better close the bargain. They are paying us a big price."

"But to tear up, when we are so nicely settled here!"

"As well as the Greers?" inquired Ralph archly.

"Yes, we are!" declared the staunch little woman. "It's been just delightful, and we have made it a real home."

"Well, the new one may suit you better," predicted the husband. "In fact, Madge, I have decided to buy the old homestead."

"Why, where, how can you get five thousand dollars?"

"The railroad company are giving us twelve thousand dollars. It is three times the value of this place, but they must have it. That leaves us seven thousand dollars and what I've saved to begin a new life in grand style."

The delighted little woman broke down and cried for sheer joy.

About all the family did that evening was to scan the prospect before them and plan out the golden life offered ahead. The old Davis homestead was a regal place—a roomy, comfortable house with beautiful gardens and a small farm area behind it sufficient to pay the expenses of living.

The next morning Mrs. Greer met her neighbor on the street. The latter noticed that she scanned her last season's dress rather keenly. Then, when she heard that the Greers were giving a large party and she was not invited, Mrs. Davis realized that the upstart Greer family were ashamed of their supposedly humble friends of former times.

The whole town knew of what they called their good luck, one morning. The sale of the little house on Railroad street was the gossip of the village. Jonas Greer heard of it with a sense of indignation. He felt wronged. Then he suddenly recalled a certain scheme ending in a bribe, and kept his conclusion to himself.

Glum and sullen Mrs. Greer grew sharp voiced and thin over "the freak of chance" that had placed her despised neighbor in affluence. She suffered worse when a new humiliation faced her. The railroad people proceeded to build their noisy, smoke producing shops within fifty feet of the Greer residence.

In the meantime the social strivings of the Greers had led them to mortgage their home. Then came the crisis. They sold their equity in the place for a song, and went to live in a rented flat.

Ralph Davis had too good a heart to neglect a relative and he placed the Greers again on their feet in a substantial way. His pensioners, however, never failed to exploit "the advantage taken of them" by the whole souled fellow who understood how to enjoy prosperity because he had known adversity.

THE MOLE AT WORK

A Naturalist Describes the Work of This Interesting Animal

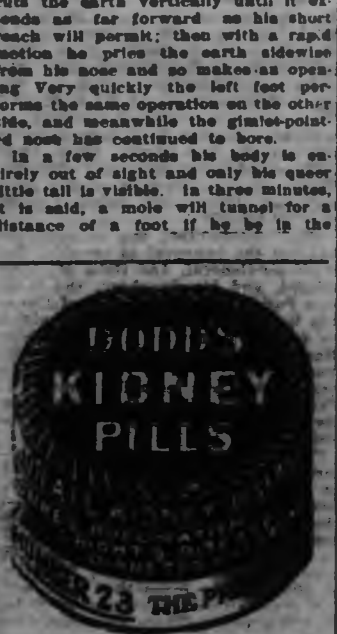
The mole at work presents an interesting sight. His nose sinks into the soil as if it were a brad-awl with a half-boring, half-pushing motion, and in a twinkling half the creature's head is buried from view. Then up comes his powerful right foot sliding close along the side of his nose. The foot which is a kind of fine-pointed chisel, cuts the earth vertically until it extends as far forward as his short reach will permit; then with a rapid motion he pries the earth sidewise from his nose and so makes an opening. Very quickly the left foot performs the same operation on the other side, and meanwhile the gimlet-pointed nose has continued to bore.

In a few seconds his body is entirely out of sight and only his queer little tail is visible. In three minutes, it is said, a mole will tunnel for a distance of a foot, if he be in the [illegible] hurry to go about his business.

A naturalist once conceived the notion of ascertaining the amount of work a mole could accomplish in a given time. Accordingly the experimenter turned a large specimen loose in the middle of a five-acre field. Five seconds, it is averred, after this mole received its freedom, it had burrowed out of sight, and the observer, with his assistants, after driving a stake at the starting-point, retired and left the little digger hard at work.

The start was made at eleven in the morning, and the direction was to the east. By six o'clock in the evening this mole is said to have dug twenty-three feet in an irregular course, keeping, however, in the same general direction and not attempting any side galleries. Twenty-four hours after the start the tunnel had been driven thirty-one feet further, with a number of side galleries, and four feet had been added at the extremity, making sixty-eight feet of the main line and thirty-six and one-half feet of branches, or a total of 104½ feet of tunnels dug in twenty-five hours.

The bottom of the tunnels run very evenly, about four inches below the surface. At certain points the hole was elliptical in shape, measuring one and one-half inches in width by two inches in height, and sometimes it was triangular, measuring two inches each way. The surface of the ground was usually cracked and raised about an inch along the course of the tunnel.



WHO ARE THE MANCHUS?

A Glance at the Born Blue Bloods of China

The Manchus are—or were—the upper crust of Chinese society. They however, are the born blue bloods. Such Chinese aristocracy as there is is the aristocracy of learning and official standing. There is nothing to prevent a Chinese peasant from becoming even a viceroy if he has the ability and the luck, but that is as far as he can go. All the folks of the royal family are Manchus. The Manchus came down from the north in 1644, at the invitation of the Chinese rulers, to quell a rebellion in China. They quelled it all right. Now that they have outlived their welcome several centuries, it remains to be seen whether or not they can quell another. The Manchus were originally a very different people from the Chinese. They were warlike, while the Chinese were peaceful. Several centuries of association and intermingling of blood, however, has had its effect on the Manchus. They have adopted, in large measure, the manners and customs of the Chinese, and not a little of their temperament. They still maintain their physical characteristics, however. The Manchus were the original queue wearers. When they took the reins of Chinese government they forced the Chinese, on pain of death, to grow queues. Latterly, however, the queues have been discarded.

Not All Equal There

A great sensation was recently caused in racing circles in the south Africa Rand by the action of the Johannesburg Turf Club in accepting any entry for the summer meeting from a native. The native is a well-known Basuto chief named N'Tsieng, whose horse, Mow, was nominated for several races, but, says a Johannesburg paper, "it is felt by many members of the club that a precedent will be created which may lead to very great difficulties in the future. Hitherto the policy of the turf club has been extremely strict, colored trainers for horses running under their rules being "barred," also colored jockeys. Natives and Indians have been allowed to run horses in Natal and at the Cape, but this practice has been "taboo" in the Transvaal, and it is felt that a great mistake has been made in departing from the policy enforced for so many years. Moreover, it is pointed out that whilst the nomination of a native has been accepted the turf club will not allow a white woman who owns horses to enter them at their meetings. A number of members of the turf have openly declared their intention of resigning if the new policy is continued."

THE FOOL WITH THE GUN

Hunters of the old school never mistook and shot and killed their companions and friends for wild animals. In the old days hunters were so careful in the woods that they didn't even kill their dogs; in the days when dogs were used to chase deer and bay bears it would have broken the old hunter's heart to have killed one of his dogs. Hunters of the old school were careful to get the game in the clear before they fired.

They did not shoot at sounds and shaking bushes. They never mistook a man or a dog for an animal of the woods.

Wild animals do not as a rule make any noise while moving about in the woods; they move silently and slyly; it is a defensive trait with them. The elephant's tread is lighter than a man's. A man may scent a cougar but he cannot hear him. The deer is noisy only when he is startled. Bears of ponderous build will as a rule sneak through the woods and make less noise than a man would make on a heavy carpet. The limbs and muscles of wild animals are not rigid; they are supple. A fox can caper over a hill covered with dry, crisp leaves and make less noise than the average man would make on a dirt road.

The frequency of "accidental" hunting murders has kept many a man out of the woods who would like to live another year. The popularity of deer and moose hunting has made it a most deadly pastime, seemingly.

The black powder cartridge was and is to-day deadly enough in the hands of the men who can mistake a canvas coat for a deer's hide. In such hands the smokeless, small bore rifle would not be more deadly. So whether the careless hunter kills a man with one bullet or another, it makes but little difference as long as the man is killed.—Rod and Gun.

AMATEUR STANDARDS

Should Canadian Authorities Not Rule Out Certain Contestants?

Canada has the strictest ruling on amateur standard of any in the world. In fact it is so strict that the Olympic people, to avoid trouble for themselves, adopted the Canadian ruling which was quite a compliment to our authorities. But in spite of the fact that our athletics are held with such an iron hand, the powers that be do not exert any severity when accepting entries from the United States for any of our Canadian meets. They take without question the status of the men as put forward by the American bodies and yearly see our men discouraged by defeat from men, who practically do nothing but follow athletics as a means of getting an easy livelihood. Our men are practically untrained, there are no facilities provided for proper practice and if a hard working athlete who needs every dollar he can earn to make ends meet, accepts anything in the nature of an honorarium, he is at once relegated to the pro. class. Each year raw untrained men, without coaching, are pitted against men who are carefully handled and coached throughout the spring, summer, fall and winter, and then the cry goes up that our Canadian athletes are of no account. This impression is fostered by the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union which looks to the attraction of American athletes to swell the gate receipts, provide amusements for spectators and forget that their primary duty is to strengthen amateurism and foster Canadian athletics. It is well known that the men who carry the colors of American clubs to victory are not of the wealthy class and the mere fact that these men do nothing but compete and train all year seems strong enough to place them under suspicion and in Canada would mean suspension. To do what these athletes do, would mean the existence of a private income of no small dimensions, but evidently the United States authorities are complacent when athletes are winning points for the big clubs.—Winnipeg Free Press.

WEIGH YOUNG STOCK

Use of Scales Will Determine Rate of Growth and Gain.

The best and practically the only way one can tell whether his animals are making proper gains or not is by the use of scales. A friend of mine who gave me the data used here tried this on a colt last year. The colt weighed 120 pounds when foaled and was weighed every week for the first six months, with the following results: Three and three-fourths pounds average daily gain first month, three and one-fourth pounds average daily gain second month, three pounds average daily gain third and fourth months, two and one-half pounds average daily gain the fifth and sixth months. At ten months the colt weighed 870 pounds and had made a daily gain of about two and one-fourth pounds, which is very good for a grade Percheron.

The colt was allowed all the whole oats and bran it would clean up until five months old. Her mother was worked nearly every day, and the colt nourished four times a day from eight o'clock in the morning to five o'clock in the afternoon. At night both mare and colt were turned out to pasture.

The winter ration consisted of a mixture of five pounds of whole oats, two pounds of shelled corn, and five quarts of skim-milk daily. A small amount of silage and mixed hay for roughage were also fed.

From the observations made by this man it will be seen that the average farm colt should make a daily gain of at least two pounds per day. Also, that good colts can be raised when the mares are working. From previous experience in using scales in feeding, this farmer says that a colt should weigh at ten months one-half of its weight at maturity.—W. A. Dorke.

BOXERS IN TRAINING

Their Leisure Time is Passed in Many Ways

Professional boxers have varied and peculiar ways about training, and their leisure time is passed in many different ways. While the system of training for a boxing contest is practically the same, each has a somewhat different method of conditioning and different ways of passing their spare time around a training camp. The conscientious trainer has little time for anything else outside of the hard monotonous grind, and if there is weight to make it is still a harder task. The old-timers seldom had an audience during their training stunts and for a contest, while the modern boxers take from four or five days to two or three weeks. It depends entirely upon their condition, the circumstances under which they are to box, and the weather. The less work, of course, leaves more time for pleasure and rest. The knuckle fighters were placed in the hands of a competent trainer, and he alone was responsible for the physical condition of the fighter and his word was law at all times. The old-timers seldom had an audience during their training stunts, and you had to be close to the fighter or manager to even get a peep, for the training was done in private and the camp doings were a secret. Many of the old-timers trained at road houses far from the end of a car line and a visit meant a long walk, unless you were fortunate enough to own, borrow or hire a horse and rig.

Don't let anybody tell you that training faithfully for a fight is a pleasure. There are few fighters that like that part of it.

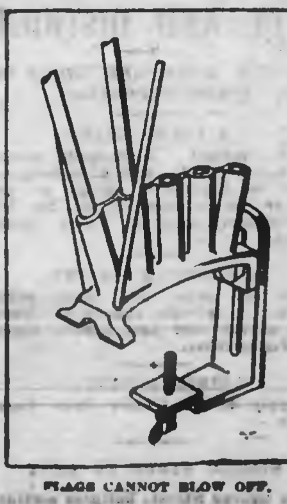
THE OLD PLUG HORSE

Don't make fun of the plug. He may be slow and awkward and never get to the stable until dark, but he is the fellow who in the end will bring home the [illegible]. The plug horse that pulls the harvester all day in the field puts more money in the bank for the honest farmer than a race horse that goes out and turns a half in 0:50 flat and then loafs for two weeks waiting for another race to be matched. The old plug goes out in sunshine and storm and pulls in a few dollars every week, but the race-horse waits for the day when the track is good and then generally loses more than he wins. Just so with the man. Pin your faith to the plug who keeps eternally at it; the fellow who gets up every morning and does so much and is ready to do it again next day. He lays up more shining dollars in the bank than the swift sport who lays around all summer waiting for luck to come along and turn a stream of silver into his pocket. One cackling Plymouth Rock hen is worth a dozen screaming eagles when it comes to paying off the mortgage. The plug is the fellow who steadies the ship and acts as ballast when the boat begins to rock. The plug is the fellow who lives contentedly and long, and when he passes away the local papers say, "He leaves his family in comfortable circumstances."

FLAG HOLDER FOR AUTO

Clamps on Car and Has Row of Sockets on Upper Portion

For members of motor clubs making runs or any other automobilists who may like to carry flags on their cars, a Montana man has devised an effective flag-holder. The support proper consists of an arched base of metal with a row of sockets spread fan-shaped above it. This base is adjustably mounted in a depending foot that has a thumbscrew in the offshoot that comes under it and can be clamped on any part of the car that offers a projection for it. The flag staffs set firmly in the sockets and cannot blow off, no matter how fast the car may go. Either a single flag or a variety of them can be used with this attachment. As this support can be moved up and down in the slot in the vertical section of the foot, it can be adjusted to fit any size car.



FLAGS CANNOT BLOW OFF.

WHY HE FLIES LOW

An Interesting Chat With a Famous Aviator.

"Why do you always fly so low?" I asked Captain Thomas S. Baldwin.

At my question the sixty-year-old sky pilot laughed good-naturedly. Then drawing me aside he whispered: "My boy, it is because I am afraid—afraid. I don't want to be a dead hero. This martyr game doesn't appeal to me."

"Well," I went on, "how do you know when you are up high enough?"

"See this lump in my throat?" he explained, placing his finger on his Adam's apple; "well, when that gets into my mouth I know it's time to come down. That's my barometer—and it never fails me," he added.

Captain Baldwin says he is known to more heathen than all the missionaries in the world. He has been going up into the air for the amusement and edification of millions of people in all corners of the world for more than forty years. He invented and demonstrated the first parachute. He has been blown over mountain ranges and out to sea. He has traveled all over the Far East, visiting Japan, China, Siam and India, first with a dirigible and later with his biplane, the "Red Devil."

The "Old man of the Air" is the most popular aviator in the game. He is frankly a showman. He assumes no airs. He built the first all-steel biplane in the world. Mostly he flies for a living. Sometimes he goes up for the pure joy of the thing.

CRUELTY TO HORSES

Military Man Makes a Plea Against the Docking Habit

Lieut. R. S. Timmis of the Royal Canadian Dragoons made a slashing attack upon the practice of docking horses' tails, in the course of an interesting address upon "The Horse," at Toronto. Docking, he said, was due mainly to "horse show maniacs."

The contrast between horses with long, silky-looking tails and what the lecturer termed the "hat-peg variety," was exemplified by lantern pictures. In California and some of the States to the south the man who docks a horse's tail is sentenced to two years' imprisonment. A list of the docked horses in the State is kept in a book, and when a horse is found with its tail docked the owner has to explain the circumstances.

Lieut. Timmis said that the Society had photographs of horses in the city of Toronto which had been docked recently and they were going to make examples of some of the offenders.

The lecturer gave some valuable hints as to the care of the horse, stating that each animal should have at least 1,500 cubic feet of space, and the stable should not be too hot.

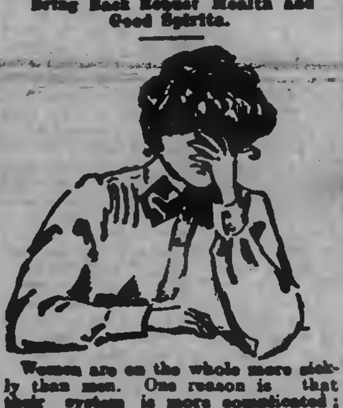
For military purposes a United States army officer has designed an automobile that will carry 14 men, with full equipment and three days' rations, 300 miles on one filling of its fuel tanks.

Women's Ailments Caused by Neglect

Proper Treatment Will Quickly Bring Back Robust Health and Good Spirits.



Women are on the whole more sickly than men. One reason is that their system is more complicated; another and more important reason is they put off measures of relief too long. At the beginning, constipation is the cause of nine-tenths of women's ailments. The blood becomes weakened and polluted—the nerves suffer and a run-down condition takes root.

Because of their mildness of action as a system regulator, no medicine for women can compare with Dr Hamilton's Pills. The kidneys quickly responded to the remedial action of Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and the result is as you would expect—pain in the back and side, shortness of breath, and bad color disappear—the functions of the body then operate naturally, congestion and pain are prevented and perfect health returns.

Thousands of happy women say Dr. Hamilton's Pills are the greatest and best blood-purifier, and finest complexion renewer, the most certain regulating medicine known. Sold by all druggists and storekeepers, 25c per box, five for $1.00 postpaid The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Wednesday and Saturdays route include the west side of Aylmer from Charlotte to London, and all streets west of Aylmer to the Monaghan road, and north of Charlotte.

Why Local Prices Dear?

Strawberries sold yesterday in Peterborough for 20 cents a box. Two weeks ago they were sold in Toronto for two boxes for 25 cents. for the finest, and good berries were sold at 10 a box. Of course, with the 25 mills on the dollar taxation to help owners of vacant lots in the suburbs unload at fancy prices to "boom" factories, the sufferer who has put his little all into a home in the central part of the city has to pay for luxuries. The dealer is possibly not to blame?

BOY KNOCKED OVER BY AUTO.

About six o'clock yesterday evening as an automobile driven by a young lady was passing along Brock street, a young lad was run over. The boy was knocked unconscious. The driver of the car at once communicated with Dr. Halliday, who came to the scene of the accident immediately. The boy fortunately escaped with little injury. Mothers of young children should keep them off the streets and thus avoid such contingencies. No blame was attached to the chauffeur.

Peterborough Cheese Board.

"Any buyer, or his representative that purchases cheese on the Peterborough Cheese Board, and who bargains for the sale of cheese with any factory within a radius of twenty-five miles, during the season of [illegible] shall be expelled or not allowed to attend the Peterborough Cheese Board as a buyer."

The foregoing is a notice of motion that was given at a meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board, yesterday morning. One thousand, seven hundred and twenty-two boxes of cheese were offered for sale on the Board this morning. The entire quantity with the exception of Ormonde, went to Mr. Gillespie, at 11 13-16 cents.

Yesterday's Brush

At yesterday's police court a young man named Shearer pleaded guilty to assaulting Sidney McCabe. McCabe said he was coming down Reid street with his girl. Five young fellows followed them. At Simcoe street, he took the girl up Thomas stood at the girl's gate and struck a streak. McNamore came up, as he place of sticky fly-paper on his, McCabe's face. On his way home, at King and Aylmer streets, Shearer and McNamore came to him, and Shearer said "I'll give you a smack on the face." McCabe told Shearer he did not want a street scrap. Shearer struck him on the mouth. Shearer followed and took him by the neck and threw him down. His assailants had forbidden him to go with the girl who is decent. To Mr. McElderry, for defendants, he did not call Shearer a vile name. McNamora and Shearer were fined $5 and costs $2.70 each, to be paid forthwith.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

DEATHS AND FUNERALS

Mr. John Atkinson.

One of the oldest and most generally respected residents of Smith has passed away in the person of Mr. J. Atkinson, at the age of 80 years. He had been the guest of Mrs. Montgomery, his daughter, at 362 Dalhousie street, and had been in poor health during the past winter. He was born in the township of Emily, and some years later removed to Smith, where he had resided for the past 38 years. His death will be regretted by his many friends. He is survived by two daughters and one son.

The funeral will take place this afternoon to the Little Lake cemetery, where Revs. H. J. Keith and Mansell will officiate

WEDDING BELLS.

Welks—Boddison.

On Tuesday afternoon a pretty, but quietly celebrated wedding was solemnized in All Saints' church by the rector, Rev. Mr. Grobb, when Miss Annie Violet Welks became the charming bride of Mr. William J. Boddison. Miss Lillie A. Boddison, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid. The couple intend to take up their residence on Romaine street.

Kidney Trouble Is Hereditary?

BUT DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS ALWAYS CURE IT.

Dresden Man, Who Inherited Trouble, Finds Speedy Relief and Permanent Cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Dresden, Ont., June 4.—(Special.)—Whether Kidney disease is hereditary or not is a matter of opinion. Mr. Samuel Burkett, a well-known resident of this place, is convinced that he inherited his from his parents. He knows that Dodd's Kidney Pills cured it.

"I inherited my Kidney Disease from my parents," Mr. Burkett states. "I was treated by a doctor, and tried various medicines, but it was not till about eighteen months ago, when I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills that I got any permanent relief.

"Since then I have not felt any effect of my old trouble, and I feel that anybody troubled with kidney disease will be benefited by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills if they follow directions closely.

"I hope that others may be helped by Dodd's Kidney Pills. I am well-known here, and anybody who wishes more particulars of my cure can have them by writing me and enclosing stamps for reply."

Dodd's Kidney Pills never fail to cure any form of kidney disease.

Canada Sees Millions in Fox Farming

WORTH HIS WEIGHT IN GOLD.— Note the silver tip of the tail. The world record price for a silver-black fox skin is $3,000; live silver-black foxes have sold at $30,000 a pair.

(Technical World Magazine for May.)

At the present price of silver-black fox skins a man possessing a source of supply would become a millionaire in a few years. Here, therefore, is a real legitimate "Wallingford" enterprise which opens a field of industry that seems destined to become one of the best paying businesses on the North American continent. The scheme is nothing more nor less than the raising of silver-black foxes, and it has reached the stage where it may be regarded as an addition to the already long list of occupations.

The scene of this new gamble is now Eastern Canadian and British Columbia, and it beats the mining game for excitement. Fox raising has become a craze; men of wealth are heavily concerned in it, and the little fellows are trailing along hoping for some of the crumbs.

The province of Prince Edward Island, which has long had the name of the "Garden of the Gulf," and has been famous for its oats, has been turned practically into one vast fox ranch, and land in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec is being requisitioned for the new venture. The final object of it all, of course, is to market the pelts, but no one has dared to kill a fox for market in the last two years. The world record price for a silver fox skin is $3000, whereas the last recorded price for live silver foxes was $30,000 a pair.

Aside from the beauty of the silver-black fox fur, its rarity has helped to keep the price up.

A perfect skin has a foundation of jet black, with a sprinkling of hairs on the back and rumps which are silver grey for a portion of the distance between the root and the tip of the hair. The extremity of the tail is always pure white. The brilliancy and sheen of a fine pelt give it a notable richness. In fact, it has been estimated by furriers that if black fox skins were as plentiful as those of the red fox, they would still command from $21 to $100, while red fox skins are quoted in current commercial price lists at $5 to $8 for ordinary specimens, and from $12 to $15 for those if Prince Edward Island. The cost of enough raw skins to make a fur coat may be guessed, when it is stated that the average weight of a healthy animal is only eleven or twelve pounds.

The start of the new industry began in this way: About twenty-five years ago Charles Dalton of Tignish, Prince Edward Island, secured a pair of silver-black foxes that had been captured on the Island and tried to breed them in floored building, but he was not very successful. He gave one of his whelps to Robert Oulton, of Alberton, Prince Edward Island, who began to raise them out of doors in pens about seventy-five feet square. This proved to be the proper method and soon the two men were making a fortune out of the business. The neighbors noticed that Dalton and Oulton were becoming rich, but for a long time they kept the secret of their success in raising foxes, and allowed no one to go near the pens. Their secret could not be concealed always and after a time others began to start fox ranches.

As the science of breeding became established, the tremendous possibilities of fox ranching appealed to the speculative tendencies of the "Islanders," and the industry advanced at a great pace. The island supply of wild foxes was soon exhausted, and the word was passed through the Northern woods that a silver-black fox trapped alive was worth many trapped dead.

At present nearly 1000 foxes are kept in pens on the farms of the Island. At least 600 of them are of the genuine silver-black variety. They are not to be slaughtered and the pelts sent to London, which is the great clearing house of the fur trade. They are to be nurtured carefully, awaiting a market from men eager to get into the new game. Dead, their pelts would bring close to $1,000,000. Their value as breeders at the present way things are going is more than $4,500,000.

The silver-black fox in captivity has had the approval of royalty. The Governor-General, the Duke of Connaught, and his daughter, the Princess Patricia, in their tour of Canada last summer, made special visits to ranches owned by Dr. Alexander MacNeill at Summerside, Prince Edward Island. One of Dr. MacNeill's new ranches was formally named St. Patrick by the Princess. Describing his part in the industry, Mr. MacNeill said:

"Three years ago, with two partners, Allen and Saunders, I started to raise silver-black foxes. We bought one pair of young silver-blacks for $4000, but they didn't breed that year. The following year we bought five and a half pairs at from $4000 to $6000 a pair. We raised fifteen young foxes that year and sold them all the way from $5000 to $10,000 a pair. There are from two to eight whelps in a litter, but rarely more than seven.

"We have now in St. Patrick's Ranch fourteen pairs of silver-black foxes. These are of the highest value as breeders. It is really difficult to say just what they are worth. We have two or three pairs that we would not part with for any amount of money, and they are certainly worth at least $30,000 a pair. We would not kill any foxes for their fur while there is such a demand for breeding purposes, and the demand is rapidly increasing in different parts of the world, especially in Russia. We expect that the demand will continue to increase for several years."

Another big ranch in Prince Edward Island is Park Farm Ranch, which has been financed by men whose previous activities were centred in department stores. This ranch now hold about $200,000 worth of silver-black foxes.

The ranch consists of five acres of grove on a hillside overlooking the harbor. A bewildering maze of special fox netting divides the grove into thirty runs or warrens. In the centre of each warren is the breeding kennel, which is constructed on scientific lines that experience has taught is the most advantageous. Provision is made to keep the dog foxes, or males, in separate enclosures at times when their presence would be too disturbing to the growing young.

Nothing that will prevent mishap to the baby foxes has been overlooked in building these kennels. Then entrance is by a covered runway from the ground. The interior is divided into two compartments. The outer compartment is the mother fox's sitting room, and the inner her bedroom. The bedroom has a sloping interior roof and a round, high entrance. Inside, the bottom is rounded, like a bowl, with sufficient depth to keep the little foxes from falling out before their eyes are open. The bedroom, usually called the nest, is interlined with pulverized cork to keep out dampness, and is surrounded by air chambers for ventilation.

There is a certain amount of ingenuity in keeping the wily fox safely within an inclosure. The warren inclosures are made by a specially prepared heavy netting and for some distance above the ground and down to the subsoil there is a closer barricade. In building the inclosures, trenches about five feet deep are dug, planks are placed on edge or cement set in, the wire is built perpendicularly from this base, and the surface earth packed in again. When Mr. Fox starts on his burrowing, he goes down as far as the hardpan and finds the resistance of wire all the way along the bounds of his inclosure. He soon discovers that there is no underground way out and thereafter confines his subsurface wandering to the centre of the inclosure.

If a fox should escape from his warren, say at feeding time, when the keeper may carelessly leave the gate open, he will encounter a wire hazard that surrounds the entire ranch; and although this is not carefully constructed as the individual inclosures, it serves to keep the fox busy until his absence is discovered and he is recaptured.

Men all over Canada are figuring on fox profits. Those who haven't foxes figure what would happen if they could only find the price of a pair. Just suppose one did have a pair! In one year, with luck, they they would produce a litter of from three to seven. The second year, by crossbreeding and exchange with other breeders this number would be increased to about twelve. The third year would show thirty-six in the pens and if luck kept up there would be 110 at the end of the fourth year. Five years' breeding and exchange might bring the number up to 380 and six to nearly 1000. Then he would be worth more than $7,000,000 if the present prices were maintained and the quality of the foxes was of the highest.

Foxes breed but once a year and are generally believed to be monogamous. They mate the first season when less than a year old, and may continue to breed until they are ten years old. The care which breeders take to keep the foxes free from outside disturbances in the mating period is the result of costly experience. Once the young have their eyes open, which is from nineteen days to a month after birth, there is not much danger.

The wise fox farmer arranges to leave the foxes very much alone at whelping time. A plentiful supply of food has been put in the pen in advance and he sees to it that no prying persons get within sound. For weeks he is in a state of exquisite expectancy. He may only guess how many foxes, which he may sell later for $10,000 to $30,000 a pair, are in the new litter. When the pups are from four to six weeks old they begin to come out and play, and from a safe post of observation he may attempt to count them and appraise their merits. But he will not succeed very well, for not all of them come out at once. They keep running in and out, with the father constantly on guard, ready to let loose sharp yelps of warning if danger threatens.

After two months the farmer may take the pups from the mother or leave them for the full six months which they will nurse if left alone. The little foxes are easy to wean, taking to bread and milk with all the avidity of a human baby.

Royal Commission Recommends Huge Grant for Provincial Education--Policies Outlined

Ottawa, June 5.—The long delayed report of the Royal Commission on Industrial Training and Technical Education, of which Dr. Jas. Robertson was chairman, was laid on the table of the House yesterday afternoon. The Commission was appointed in May, 1910, and the report is of a most comprehensive character. The Commission recommends that to carry on teaching of drawing, manual training, nature study, experimental schools, there should be a fund created by the Dominion from which payments would be made to the Provincial Governments during a period of ten years. The commission recommends the expenditure of at least $350,000 a year for ten years, to be divided according to population.

The Commission in its recommendations in regard to industrial training, lays down the principle that it should be under Provincial control and regulation, but should receive financial support from the Dominion.

Policies Outlined.

The report outlines the development of a Dominion policy and suggest the formation of local urban and rural development boards, provincial development commissions and Dominion commissions.

It recommends that the sum of $3,000,000 be provided annually for a period of ten years for technical education. The payments should be made to secure as speedily as practicable the service of each Province of an adequate supply of teachers and instructors to carry on industrial training and technical education and to secure the establishment or extension and maintenance of classes, courses, schools, or other institutions for industrial training and technical education. The report also recommends that part of the money be spent for the provision of suitable and adequate appliances and equipment and also to provide scholarships.

COMPLIMENT FOR OUR FEDERAL MEMBER

The Ottawa Citizen, (Con.) in a long editorial in its issue of June 4th, scores both the Government and the Opposition for subsidizing the C.N.R. It declines to bow before what was called the desperate "exigencies of the situation." It credits Mr. Burnham with being the one member of Parliament to protest against the action of the Parliament in this respect. Mr. Burnham advocated the taking over of the road altogether if aid was necessary, rather than handing out as a gift a large sum of money to a private corporation.

WORK ON THREE DREADNOUGHTS WILL START IMMEDIATELY

Winston Churchill Explains That Step is Taken Because Canadian Senate Rejected Canadian Naval Bill

London, June 5.—Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, addressing the House of Commons this afternoon, said that the British Government would immediately begin the construction of the three warships provided for in this year's naval budget, instead of waiting until next March, as originally intended. The Lord of the Admiralty explained that the determination to lay the ships at once was caused by the Canadian Senate's rejection of the Naval Bill.

NOTHING TO BE DONE FOR BANK VICTIMS

Farmers Bank Depositors Will Have to Wait for the Next Session.

Ottawa, June 5.—Parliament will prorogue at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon. This intimation was given by Premier Borden to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod this morning, and he was advised that His Excellency the Administrator, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick might be summoned for that hour to the Upper Chamber. The House has now been in session almost continuously with the exception of the Christmas recess, since November 15.

Replying to a question by Mr. Lanctot, of La Prairie, this morning as to whether the Government intended to reimburse the depositors of the Farmers Bank, and if so whether it proposed to act in a like manner with the depositors of the Bank of St. Jean and the Bank Ville Marie, Mr. Borden said:

"An oral answer will be given to this question to-morrow."

It is understood that nothing will be done this year to reimburse the depositors of the defunct bank. An announcement is, however, expected from the Prime Minister in which some measure of relief will be proposed for next year.

A LOCAL LIVE-WIRE REAL ESTATE FIRM

Attention is hereby called to a big half page advertisement of Messrs. C. J. Carroll & Co., the hustling local real estate agents of 412 George street. This advertisement calls well deserved attention to Victoria Heights, Peterborough's coming residential locality. The wise man or woman, who has faith in Peterborough's growth, and, who has not? should secure some of this property whilst the securing is good, and that is right now.

Mr. Carroll, whilst a comparatively new addition to the estate agents of this city, has demonstrated that intelligent methods and up-to-date hustling, combined with strict integrity can accomplish more, and more quickly, the ends sought by some of his competitors.

ING KAPY BEVERAGE HAS A "KICK" WITH IT

Chinaman Fined for Selling It At the Canton Club.

Toronto, June 5.—Sim Kim was to-day fined $200 and costs for selling liquor without a license at the Canton Club.

Mr. J. W. Curry, K.C., for the defence, claimed that Kim had only sold a Chinese liquor called Ing Kapy, which he stated was a medicine, but which the Crown's analysis proved to be 90.10 proof spirits.

The charge also was that Kim had sold beer, a dozen empty bottles having been found at the club.

In imposing the fine Magistrate Denison said he would like to see the case appealed and would give Mr. Curry every assistance as the latter intimated that he wished to appeal.

PRINCE ALBERT TO SEE THE FALLS TODAY WITH PARTY

Quebec, June 5.—H.M.S. Cumberland arrived at 6.30 a.m. to-day and anchored in the stream opposite the Citadel.

Capt. Andrew Smyth went to Government House and paid a visit to Sir Francois Langelier, Lieutenant-Governor. He returned the same afternoon.

Officers and cadets of the Cumberland, including Prince Albert, left this afternoon by C.P.R. at 1.30 for Niagara Falls. They will be back next Sunday. The following programme has been prepared for their reception here.

Sunday, 8th, 3 p.m.—Visit at Spencerwood; at 4 p.m., promenade around Victoria Park.

Monday, 9th, from 4 to 7—Garden party on the Citadel.

Tuesday, 10th, from 4 p.m.—Garden party at Spencerwood.

Wednesday, 11th, from 4 to 7 p.m. —Tea at the Quebec Lawn Tennis Club.

Thursday, 12th, from 4 to 7 p.m. —Tea and dance at the Chateau Frontenac.

DIAMOND MEN STOCK UP EXPECTING HIGHER TARIFF

New York, June 5.—Diamond importers are still rushing large quantities of gems into this country in expectation of an increase in the tariff. According to the customs appraisers' figures the value of gems received through this port during May was [illegible], record breaking figures for the month of May. Since the first of the year the import of gems has amounted to over [illegible]-000,000.

CATHOLIC FATHER CANNOT HAVE SON

The Judge Holds That Adopted Parents May Keep Little Freddie.

Toronto, June 5.—Frederick Kenna aged 5, will remain with his adopted parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Breckon, notwithstanding the habeas corpus application of the father, Phillip Kenna, now of Montreal.

The little lad became the ward of the Children's Aid, and articles of adoption were signed by the Breckons on April 17th, 1912.

Kenna asked Mr. Justice Middleton for possession of the boy, one ground being that the father should decide as to the child's religious education, but his lordship holds that such a right is not absolute, and that the child's welfare is a paramount consideration.

Kenna, who is an English Catholic married Lucinda Dolores de Phillips, a Protestant, at Manchester, ten years ago. He wishes to place the boy with his godparents at Montreal.

The Breckons are worth about $40,000 and have no children, and are willing to bring up young Kenna as their own.

PUBLIC LIBRARY BOARD IN REGULAR SESSION

A regular meeting of the Peterborough Public Library Board was held last evening at 8 p.m.

There were present Mr. W. J. Morrow, chairman, and Messrs. H. Ritchie, H. R. H. Kenner, A. Mowat, T. F. Matthews, J. Corkery, E. H. D. Hall and F. Sollitt.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

A letter was read from A. H. A. Colquhoun, Deputy Minister of Education, acknowledging receipt of a letter to the Hon. Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, with reference to the proposed amendments to the Public Libraries Act, stating that the matter would receive careful consideration.—Received.

It was decided to close the Library every Wednesday at 12 o'clock, during July and August.

Moved by Mr. Mowat, seconded by Mr. Matthews, that the report of the Finance Committee be adopted when certified to by Mr. E. H. D. Hall, chairman of the Finance Committee.

Moved by Mr. Hall, seconded by Mr. Matthews, that the Board adjourn to meet again the first Thursday in September.

SUFFRAGETTE BANNER RAISED WHEN HORSE AND WOMAN FELL

Militancy Has Received its Biggest Advertisement, But More Harm Will be Done With the Masses Than Any Number of Bogus Bombs and Burned Houses

London, June 5.—The double Derby sensation engrosses the public to the exclusion of all else to-day. The general opinion may be summed up by saying this is the biggest advertisement that militancy has given itself. Suffragettes will remember Aboyeur's Derby longer than the bookies, and with more regret than the backers of Craganour.

The sheer imbecility of the attempt is likely to do the movement more harm with the masses than any number of bombs or burned houses. It is not supposed that headquarters had anything to do with the freak, which was obviously the work of an unbalanced individual, though some colleague in the crowd hoisted the suffragette placard at the moment the horse and the woman fell down. This glaring instance of lack of balance is even more damaging to the woman's cause than the more serious crimes of the militants.

"The public," says the Times, "are coming to the conclusion that many of the suffragettes are not altogether responsible for their acts. The growth of that belief will not improve the prospects for woman's suffrage. We are mistaken if yesterday's exhibition does not do more hurt to the cause of women's suffrage that years of agitation will undo."

PETERBOROUGHS MOST MODERN PRESS PLANT

Mr. Elliott, press erector, of the Toronto Type Foundry Co., has just completed the work of installing two new modern presses in The Times Building. The Times Job room is now almost equal, in its up-to-date equipment, to any similar establishment in the Dominion. In the press department there are four modern cylinder presses and three latest type platen presses. These are all of the most modern type.

On account of the rapid increase in our business many of our customers have been compelled to wait for orders. Hereafter this will be unnecessary, as our capacity has been increased by about 75 per cent.

We cheerfully invite our friends to call and see our new plant in operation.

MR. J. H. BURNHAM OPPOSED TO BOUNTIES

Hansard gives the remarks by Mr. Burnham in railway and other subsidies. The answer by Mr. Carvell shows how the Opposition viewed the C.N.R.'s and other railways' subsidies:

Mr. BURNHAM: So far as I am personally concerned, I would like to put on record my belief that the time has come in the history of this country when we should no longer subsidize anything. If public assistance has got to be given for the general benefit of the country, the work with respect to which that assistance is given should be undertaken by the country itself. I wish to place myself on record in that respect, because I firmly believe in that policy, and I hope the day will soon come when we shall grant no further subsidies to private parties out of the public treasury.

Mr. BURNHAM: Why do you not join me in opposing subsidies?

Mr. CARVELL: I do not think you are right. I want to see railways developed in Canada, and I do not see how you can get railways without assisting them.

BOY THIEVES CAUGHT AT THE BALL GROUNDS

A few days ago some boys broke into the booth at Riverside Park, most likely with the intention of stealing what they could lay their hands on; but fortunately nothing had been left in the booth after the White Caps went away.

They also broke into the storehouse to the west of the booth, smashed in the panels of the door, but nothing of any account had been left in the room.

On another occasion, a lad was caught trying to pry open another door underneath the stand. And on questioning it was found that he had stolen three balls from the Guelph team while they were here, and took some fifty tickets for the grandstand from a grip belonging to one of the men in charge of the stands.

Whilst no prosecution followed in this case, boys or men are warned that hereafter no mercy will be shown to any person found on the grounds after they have been locked up for the night.

MR. T. H. LENNOX SEES THE MINISTER, NEW TRIAL LIKELY

Gibson's Council Goes to Ottawa Again to Explain Whole Case

"While I had no opportunity of going fully into the details of the case with the Minister of Justice, I did lay the facts before him, and arranged to go fully into the whole matter next week."

Toronto, June 5.—This was the statement made by Mr. T. H. Lennox, K.C., to-day in reference to his trip to Ottawa on behalf of Charles Gibson.

Mr. Lennox spent the greater part of yesterday at the Capital, but owing to the great pressure of work due to the approaching close of the House, the Minister of Justice could only grant a short interview.

"While he would not commit himself in any way," continued Mr. Lennox, "Hon. Mr. Doherty seemed very favorably impressed by what I had time to tell him, and I am very hopeful of securing a new trial."

Mr. Lennox's next visit will depend upon how soon the House adjourns. As soon as this takes place, the Minister will wire Mr. Lennox when to lay the whole case, in detail, before him.

SWINDLERS WORE GRAB OF ROMAN CATHOLIC PRIESTS

Foreigner Taken in Sadly by old Valise Trick--Lost Seven Hundred to Slick Strangers

Toronto, June 5.—Two pretended Catholic priests succeeded in robbing Stefano Stassoff, a Greek, of $700 yesterday afternoon by means of the old valise trick. Only $100 of the amount taken was Stassoff's own money, the balance of $600 he had borrowed from a friend, Christo Grongier, to give to the two crooks.

There were no new flourishes on the old trick and the same old properties and line of talk were used by the crooks who relied on Stefano's greenness to gather him in. It did.

One of them respectably dressed, accosted their victim in front of the Labor Bureau on Front street and after telling him in moving words how the sound of the Italian that he was speaking had affected the hearer, he proceeded as a mark of his gratitude to explain to Stassoff what the contents of the valise were that he was carrying. Arm and arm with his victim he walked along Front street and in accents low and mysterious, told him of the $14,000 in real money that he had with him in the valise; money that had been entrusted to him by pious souls to distribute among the Catholic immigrants in Toronto.

Promised Him Big Share.

There was a fine fat share coming to Stassoff out of this money if he wanted it, and when the second of the pretended priests had joined the party and confirmed his partner's statements, poor Stefano was hooked. He was even to be given a good job as well as a share of the $14,000.

Taking him to the grounds of the Metropolitan Church the valise was opened and big fat bundles of money done up in packages of $1,000, displayed. Each bundle had a $100 bill on the top of it; well made good looking stage money.

Of course Stefano had to show that he wanted a share and was willing to accept the fine position that was coming to him. Stefano even was willing to the extent of depositing $700 in the valise which was to be sealed up after he had put his money in and put in his keeping so that there could be no deception.

DR. MACKENZIE IS MODERATOR

General Assembly Will Hold All Its Meetings in Massey Hall.

Toronto, June 5.—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Canada opened its session last evening in Knox Church, but owing to the large number of delegates present from the Congress, it was decided that the Assembly should adjourn to meet in Massey Hall, and it was there that the first session was held. For the week ending June 12, the Assembly will meet in the morning at Massey Hall from 10 to 12.30 in the afternoon from 2.30 to 5.30 and in the evening from 8 to 10.

Dr. Mackenzie Elected.

The retiring Moderator, Rev. Dr. D. G. McQueen, delivered his sermon after the singing of psalms, and after prayers, the Assembly proceeded to the election of its Moderator. Revs. Dr. Murdock Mackenzie, of Northern Honan, China; Dr. Herridge, of Ottawa, and Dr. Cas. Ross of London, were nominated. Dr. Ross resigned, and Dr. Mackenzie was elected by the Commissioners. Rev. Dr. McQueen, in his sermon, held up Paul, "the Apostle of Jesus Christ" as the great missionary. He spoke of the inspiration which such a commission as his could give, and prayed that the Assembly would be the occasion of a new Pentecost to the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

CANADIAN OATS MAY NOW BE ADMITTED TO STATES FREE

Chicago, Ill., June 5.—Talk is going the rounds of admitting Canadian oats free. Winnipeg oats are 3 cents under Chicago, and the visible there is 10,281,000 bushels.

The admission of Canadian stocks into this country is expected to have a depressing influence later in the season. Many of those who were long sold out yesterday, and this theory and the impression prevailed that oats were high enough for the time being.

Flour stocks in the United States outside of Minneapolis, June 1st, as reported by the Board of Trade, were 620,000 barrels, a decrease of 33,000 barrels in May, compared with 101,000 barrels last year, when stocks were 557,000

ROSIE ROACH WILL BE EXAMINED MENTALLY

At yesterday's police court, Rosie Roach was charged with using grossly insulting language to another woman. Rosie said the other girl had called her names some four months ago. The complainant said Rosie had called her the vilest name that can be given to a woman. Bruce Clark said he heard Rosie call the complainant the name as the latter was sitting on her verandah. The complainant gave Rosie no provocation. Mrs. Roach said the latter was about 30 years of age. Rosie went to live with the old railroad employe. The chief said Rosie should be examined as to her sanity. P.C. Meaher said Rosie can be seen on the streets from early morning until 11 o'clock at night. Rosie spits in people's faces and calls them names. She hits people with her umbrella and hands. He did not think Rosie is a pure woman. Detective Newhall agreed with the last witness. Rosie has an hallucination that people call her names. He is quite sure that Rosie is not right in her head. She was remanded for a week to be examined as to her sanity.

BASEBALL

The Petes fell down yesterday in their first game in the Hamilton series. The boys worked hard, but the Ambitious City aggregation were there with good hitting and fielding, and beat the White Caps by the score of 7—6.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—South-east winds; fair at first, showery by night.

PETERBOROUGH WILL BE SHOW'S WINTER QUARTERS

The Times was yesterday in receipt of the following communication from Mr. W. C. Fleming, a former member of our staff. This letter is of exceptional interest as coming from a former Peterborough boy and, owing to the fact that this city has been selected as the winter home of a successful show. The letter reads as follows:

Editor Morning Times.

Dear Sir,—Kindly publish the enclosed reader in your next issue.

The writer will be in Peterborough within the next few weeks at which time I will call upon you in person regarding advertising in your publication from time to time until the opening of our summer season, 1914.

This article, no doubt will be of great surprise to the natives of my old home town, as they will learn that we have selected your city as the winter quarters of our Wild West Show.

With best wishes for the future success of your paper, Editor-in-Chief, and entire staff, I wish to remain,

Yours very truly,
W. C. FLEMING,

General Mgr. Fleming Bros.' Hippodrome Wild West and Indian Congress.

The article referred to above will appear to-morrow

BOY WENT TO DEATH, WAS COOL TO THE END

Auburn, N.Y., June 5.—Michael Goslinski, the Buffalo boy who killed Patrolman George M. Claus on November 19 last, died in the electric chair this morning. The prison officers declared he was the coolest murderer ever held in the prison. Without bravado, and with a prayer on his lips, he walked resignedly to the chair, a slender blue ridge, blonde youth.

"Tell mother not to cry when they bring me home. Tell all to be brave. I am sorry I shot Mr. Claus, and now I should pay the penalty. I am happy." He declared to his sister, as she bade him farewell last evening.

NO GARRISON POLICE.

Halifax, N.S., June 5.—The garrison police will no longer patrol the streets of Halifax. Ever since the establishment of Halifax as a military post it has been their duty to walk the straight and narrow way. The new order was issued to-day.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 25c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., [illegible] George St., directly opposite [illegible] store.

DEALT IN MILLIONS

Spectacular Business Career of Hooley the Promoter of Companies

Ernest Terah Hooley, the English financier who was released from Wormwood Scrubs prison, after serving nine months of a one year sentence for fraud, had a most diversified career. In a few years he piled up what was apparently a colossal fortune, and then there came a sudden collapse followed by bankruptcy proceedings, and all his vast wealth vanished into nothingness.

He dealt in millions. One stupendous scheme followed another, until the public were dazzled at his apparent success, and his name became a synonym for financial sagacity and daring. Peers and baronets and titled ladies crowded his reception rooms to ask for "inside" information as to his companies.

Hooley was the son of a lace manufacturer in Nottinghamshire, who from the position of a working "twist hand" built up a small but profitable lace-making business at Long Eaton, near Nottingham. It was in turning his father's business into a limited company that the coming financier tasted blood. This opened his eyes to the possibilities for buying concerns cheap and then persuading the public to buy them at a profit. He went to London and took up his quarters in the Midland Grand Hotel, where he had a suite of eight rooms. His big schemes began with [illegible].

Altogether, his [illegible] companies, floated between 1896 and 1898, were capitalized at [illegible].

Besides [illegible], Hooley had many other large schemes on hand. According to the Official Receiver's statement, Hooley promoted twenty-six companies having a total nominal capital of $93,054,000.

His "consideration" for the same—that is the price at which they were sold to the companies—was $70,662,319. The purchase money paid by him for these properties was $45,517,670.

This showed an apparent gross profit of over twenty-five million dollars, but this by no means represents the actual profit which he made.

The bankruptcy proceedings in 1898 made a great sensation. The estate was finally wound up in 1903, and unsecured creditors received a dividend of about 20 cents on the dollar.

HOW MANY ANCESTORS

Trace Back Twenty Generations And It Will be Seen Everyone Has Over a Million

The full number of ancestors possessed by every individual is far greater than is generally supposed. It is usually accepted that a person has only two ancestors in each generation of past time. This is based upon the theory that each person had only two parents and is fostered by the prevalent practice of ignoring the forebears of the mothers all the way. Glancing down the succession of father and son from age to age, one notices that for each individual in the protracted series there are only two progenitors, and receive the impression that these are all that need be taken into account, and it simplifies the reckoning greatly to lose sight of all the others.

If this impression were correct, the number of man's ancestors traced back to the beginning of history, and adding two for each generation, would not altogether amount to only 1,200 if traced back for 20,000 years. There are some whose ideas are a little broader. They recognize that the mothers of the long procession bring in new relationships, but treating them as terminal branches, they return to the trunk line as the only one having permanence, and therefore the only one necessary to follow.

It is now admitted that the number of ancestors of every human being doubles in every generation, as his descent is traced upward, excepting for certain checks which retard this natural law. In the first generation backward, a man has two ancestors—his father and mother. In the second he has four in the third he has eight, in the fourth 16, and, by the time he reaches his 20th generation, he is compelled to acknowledge his descent from 1,048,576 ancestors.

There are families in which it is impossible that the law of increase in ancestry should not be doubled after the first generation. There must be two parents for each individual. It might be possible to have two grandparents instead of four, as in the case of the Incas. The custom of ancient Peru required that the legitimate queen of their sovereign must be his sister, because, as a child of the sun, he could not ally himself with an ordinary mortal.

MACEDONIAN CUSTOMS

No One Washes in Still Water and Rotten Pears a Delicacy

The hospitality of the Macedonian householder is extended to any stranger or traveller, according to Mrs. Herbert Vivian, who published an account of her journeyings through that country in a London paper. During a long tour of Macedonia, Mrs. Vivian only stayed in one hotel, being at other times most cordially received in one house or another.

"I have a vivid recollection," she wrote, "of a visit to an Archdeacon of the Orthodox Church in a town thirty miles or so from Uskub. The little house was charming, with a gay smiling garden, but it was guarded like a fortress. High walls surrounded the place, and huge barred gates were closed every night with pomp and ceremony. The ground floor was used as a granary, and the living and sleeping rooms were approached by a ladder which led to a balcony. In this balcony was a trap door, and when one got safely through it was let down and bolted.

"I was given a big room, with practically no furniture save a wooden bench running the whole way round, and near the ceiling a shelf ornamented with bowls and cups. All day I wondered where I was going to sleep, but at night time the Archdeacon's sister appeared with long, long mattresses which she strewed on the benches, and by signs made me understand this was my bed. I felt very travel-stained and dirty, and finally made my hostess understand I wanted a wash. She returned bearing a curious old chased pewter ewer and basin and insisted on pouring the water on my hands whilst I held them out. No one in the Balkans will wash in still water, and it is a special attention when your hostess insists on acting as maid.

NEW RUSSIAN FLAG

Czar Thinks Present Style Too Much Like the Dutch

Some time ago a special commission was appointed by the Czar to consider the advisability of a new flag for Russia. The Commission completed its labors with exemplary expedition and presented its report. The reason for this somewhat unusual proceeding is that Peter the Great, to whom was originally due the Russian flag, appears merely to have copied the Dutch—a flag with three horizontal stripes of red, blue, and white. The Commission recommended that these colors should be replaced by black, white, and yellow, arranged in the same way as before—as a horizontal tricolor. The merchant marine is to keep the same ensign as before—red, blue, and white; while the flag of the Imperial Navy will be white with a blue St. Andrew's cross, as before. It is generally assumed that these recommendations will meet with the Czar's approval.

Position in Sleep

Be careful about forming bad sleeping habits. Don't allow yourself to become addicted to sleeping in one position or you will soon find that you can't feel comfortable in any other. And one sleeping position, long kept, is bound to have a bad effect on the health.

Sleep on one side and then the other. Switch to sleeping on your stomach occasionally. If sleeping on your back doesn't seem to induce nightmares, don't be afraid to sleep that way once in a while. Don't curl up with your hands on your knees. And don't sleep on a thick pillow.

FASTEST ARMORED SHIP

Vessel Steamed at a Rate of Over 34 Knots an Hour

The battle cruiser Princess Royal, the nineteenth Dreadnought of the British Fleet which was commissioned for service in the first cruiser Squadron of the Home Fleet, is 660 feet in length, 88 feet 6 inches in beam, and displaces 26,350 tons. Her turbines are of 70,000 horsepower and were designed for a speed of twenty-eight knots.

On trials, however, the vessel easily exceeded her contract speed, and was able for a time to maintain a rate of 34.7 knots. She is thus easily the fastest armored ship in the world, beating the Lion by three knots; and there are comparatively few torpedo-craft which can show a better speed.

The Princess Royal can discharge at one broadside projectiles weighing 10,000 pounds.

Monkey Invades Glasgow Shops

A monkey which escaped from a shop in Argyle street, Glasgow, bolted into a fruit and confection shop, where it jumped about and evaded capture by getting on to a high shelf. From which vantage point it absolutely refused to be tempted with nuts and other eatables. From this shelf it jumped on to the fanlight above the door, and in this way took its departure. It then climbed into an adjoining sausage manufacturer's and got behind the counter, where it upset many articles. A considerable time elapsed before it was captured.

THE STAMP OF PUBLIC APPROVAL

PUBLIC approval of the light beer is most emphatic.

A Prominent Physician, speaking before the Ontario Medical Council, said:

"Lager and Mild Ale are forms of liquid beefsteak, which impart power and strength to the system."

In the city of Brantford a Local Option campaign, similar to what we went through in Peterborough, is under way. Some interesting meetings have been held and petitions are being circulated asking for a vote. A Local Option by-law was voted on in the year 1910 and was defeated because a three-fifths' vote was not secured in its favor, although it had a majority of 408.

New Treatment Now Advocated For Bronchitis

Is Having Wonderful Success, and is Making Most Remarkable Cures

For bronchitis a different form of treatment is now advocated. It consists of a scientifically devised vapor that penetrates to the uttermost recesses of the lungs and bronchial tubes. Every spot that is sore, every surface that is irritated is at once bathed with soothing balsams and healing essences that make chronic bronchitis an impossibility.

This treatment now so universally employed in bronchitis, throat troubles, colds, etc., is called CATARRHOZONE. It acts just as air of the pine woods acts, as a healing antiseptic remedy for all diseases of the breathing organs.

Just think of it—a remedy that can be carried with the very air you breathe to the seat of bronchial or catarrhal inflammation. A remedy powerful enough to kill germ life and yet so healing that disease flees before it. Catarrhozone is truly a wonderful remedy. In many lands it has lands it has won its way, and is affording grand results to sufferers from colds, catarrh, throat weakness, asthma and bronchitis. There is no sufferer from a grippy cold or any winter ill, that won't find a cure in Catarrhozone, which is employed by physicians, ministers, lawyers and public men throughout many foreign lands. Large size lasts two months and costs $1.00 and is guaranteed; small size 50c., sample size, 25c., all storekeepers and druggists, or The Ctarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

CHILD LABOR SOMETIMES A BLESSING

In McClure's for April Miss Helen Todd, a Chicago factory inspector, has an interesting article on "Why Children Work." It will shock the child-labor agitator, but we rather think the facts Miss Todd presents will be illuminating to those who usually hear only one side of the question.

The basis of the agitation for child labor legislation is that, for its mental and physical betterment, the child ought to be kept out of the factory and in the school. But Miss Todd's experience leads her to believe that if such were the universal law the child would be the sufferer.

Of 500 children whom she questioned, 412 said they would rather work in a factory than go to school. Their reasons were that it was harder work to go to school than to work in a factory, and you didn't get any money for it, while, on the other hand, the teachers "hit" them and didn't treat them as well as their bosses in the factory.

"There is enough in this article of Miss Todd's," says The Watchman, one of the foremost religious publications of Boston, "to make educators and philanthropists sit up and take notice. If we add to this the statement of Dr. Stiles, the discoverer of the hookworm disease, that the children of the poor whites of the South, who work in factories, are distinctly in better condition than those who do not, having better clothes and food, and shoes to protect their feet from contact with the dirt that gives the hookworm disease, and regular hours and habits, we see that the question of child labor is no all on one side."

Many things, in the opinion of The Watchman, are worse for the child than learning to work and working, provided the conditions are suitable and healthful. To a large number of children the education given in the public schools of the past, and in most of them to-day, is of little value to the child. In many cases it is actually a disadvantage. It is such, for instance, when it fits them for spheres they can never occupy and gives them tastes they can never gratify without resort to dishonesty and vice.

Child labor should be rigidly regulated. The State should insist on only the most perfect hygienic and sanitary conditions in places where women and children work. Their moral welfare should be protected. They ought to have fair treatment. They are entitled to a wage proportionate to the labor they perform. But to condemn child labor as an evil in itself, and to insist that every child should be forced to attend school regardless of the conditions that surround it in its home must inevitably lead, in many instances, to cruel hardships and often to the unfitting of the child to earn its own living after leaving school.

The Manufacturers' Record, disclaiming any desire to see immature children in the mills, holds that steady and regular employment under some conditions is vastly better for children than idleness.

"The education which a child gets through the discipline of employment," says The Record "is in many cases better than the smattering of misinformation which it gets in a large part of the educational work of the country, where children are often so trained as to unfit them for work, so that hundreds of thousands are becoming drifters in a land of limitless opportunities, when, if they had been properly trained in the discipline of work, they could have become a blessing to themselves and to the world."

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES

CASHLESS MILLIONAIRES

Frequently a Lamentable Lack of Quick Assets.

Though Canada's basic position is undoubtedly sound, there is a lamentable lack of quick assets on the personal ledgers of most business men. Canada has hundreds, one might say thousands, of millionaires, and thousands of near-millionaires, but their wealth is, for the main part "on paper" and the average, common or garden individual whose entire assets amount to not more than a few hundred dollars will be surprised to know that the millionaire or near-millionaire hasn't enough "hard cash" to meet his own personal obligations. This is no exaggeration. Of course these wealthy men are fairly "liquid" during a boom season when it is easy to realise on land, property or stocks, but let the boom wane momentarily and the men credited with hundreds of thousands of dollars of personal fortune, are tied up as tightly as any lunatic in a straight jacket.

There has been so much speculative activity in all commodities and such a bright prospect for its continuance that everybody's account is extended to the utmost. It should require no argument to show that this is radically wrong and dangerous. There is not enough liquid resource in the great personal fortunes of Canadians, and it is bad for the whole country. It is clear enough that when everybody is "tied up" there can be no automatic support in time of liquidation. If the near-millionaire kept from 45 to 50 per cent. of their resources in hard cash, they would have ample funds to "play with" and at the same time have a reserve capital which would not only be an asset to themselves but to the whole country. Neither would they lose by this policy, as they would be in a position to take advantage of the "bargain counter" when the man "loaded up" had to sacrifice some of his extended and top-heavy commitments.—The Financial Times.

SURPRISED THE EMPEROR

Pilot Refused to Obey Orders of the Kaiser and Was Decorated.

A member of the German Yacht Club has related the following anecdote about the German Emperor:

When the Kaiser's yacht, the Hohenzollern, was entering a Norwegian port, the Kaiser, impatient at the vessel's slow progress, rang the engine room telegraph bell and ordered increased speed. To his great stupefaction, the pilot, an old Norwegian named [illegible], jumped to the telephone and called to the engineers to take no notice of the signal, but to slow down again. The Emperor, after a glance at the man who dared to speak thus in his presence, ordered the pilot to go and put himself under arrest, but the old man, without moving an eyebrow, replied: "I shall not leave this spot. The ship is under my direction, and nobody, not even an Emperor, is going to give me any orders."

The officers present, knowing that the pilot had maritime law on his side, looked on in silence, and were surprised to see the Emperor quit the bridge and leave the old pilot in charge of the ship's navigation.

On the following day the Kaiser's mood has passed, and he decorated the old sailor, at the same time appointing him his official pilot in Norwegian waters.

ESKIMO DOG FARMS

How Mrs. Scott Breeds and Trains Dogs for Arctic Exploration.

At Grove Park, one of the suburbs of London, Mrs. Scott conducts a very interesting dog farm. Her specialty is Eskimo dogs, which she breeds and trains for the market. The market is not very large, but it is sufficient to make it worth her while to raise and train the best possible Eskimo dogs. It is not the ordinary dog market. It is the market for Eskimo dogs which are trained for Arctic exploration. Her kennels have only pure blooded animals of carefully selected stock, and from earliest puppyhood she trains them in how to eat and how to work. When she gets through with an Eskimo dog the animal is not nearly so ferocious as one that has just "growed up" in the surroundings of an Eskimo village.

They adapt themselves quickly to new masters and they have acquired good eating manners, so that they are not so likely to attack the cupboard or fresh game. Mrs. Scott feeds her animals no meat except pemmican and dried fish brought from Norway; a large part of the diet is especially prepared biscuit. She has supplied trained dogs for a number of Arctic and Antarctic expeditions.

Edison's Cigars.

Thomas Alva Edison, the great inventor, is a great smoker, but he becomes so absorbed in his work that he frequently forgets all about his cigars.

Once he complained to his tobacconist of the rapidity with which his "weeds" disappeared, suspecting that some one about him had got into the habit of helping himself.

The tobacconist agreed to supply the inventor with some specially "faked" cigars.

"I'll fill 'em up with horsehair and hard rubber," said the tradesman. "Then you'll find there will not be so many missing."

Several weeks thereafter Mr. Edison met his tobacconist and began rating him roundly.

"Look here," said the great man, "I thought you were going to fix me up with some faked cigars."

"Why, so I did," replied the other, in some surprise. "Don't you remember the boxes with the green labels—cigars tied with dark brown ribbon?"

Edison smiled reflectively, and said with the gleam of a great discovery in his eye:

"Those! Why, I smoked them myself!"

FOR CLEAN SPORT

A Former Cambridge Blue Points to the End of Gambling.

Rev. Canon Stuart, of Cambridge, England, speaking in Winnipeg, made a strong plea to the young man of today to lead a clean life in mind and body. He spoke strongly against gambling, which he said did incalculable harm. He pointed out that not only did it hurt a business man but it spoiled sport and kept it from being clean and wholesome. Canon Stuart said that he felt he had some right to speak of sport since he had captained the Harrow eleven and had rowed for Cambridge. Gambling and betting spoilt the character. A merchant in following legitimate speculation is building up his character. The man who indulges in betting finds that by a stroke of good fortune he can make more than by a long grind at honest work and so he takes a dislike to work. This is not building up character. The speaker pointed out that those present who were employers would never trust a man who gambled. Such a man preferred to shirk honest labor and try and make his money by the lucky stroke. Gambling produced a hardness in character and a selfishness in nature, and the gambler does not give his neighbor a "quid pro quo." He is getting something for nothing; something for which he has not worked. As an illustration he told how he had rowed at Cambridge and upon one occasion rowing in his boat as stroke, he also by a neat arrangement would steer the boat with his foot my pressing on a device attached by catgut to the rudder. At one important race, when all was going well, the catgut suddenly snapped and they were forced to pull into the shore, and upon examining the catgut found that it had been neatly cut through, all but one strand. It was not their opponents who had done this, but some miserable man who, having a bet that their boat would not win, had taken these means to ensure his money. There was one instance of the result it had on sport.

"Let our sport be clean and manly," said the speaker. Betting resulted in covetousness. It was all very well for those who gambled to say "it is not the money." It was the money. Even though they might say they did not care about the money but wanted the excitement. He had seen an example of this, when a young fellow was asked to put money on a game of billiards to make it more exciting. He said he would, but since all had said that they did not care about the money it would be a good plan for the winner to put his winnings in a mission box that was on the mantlepiece. This the players did not care about.

NO COLOR LINE IN CANADIAN ATHLETICS

That there is no color line in sport in Canada is once more shown by the fact that the Ottawa Rough Riders played Gordon Simpson, a mulatto boy, at full-back in Hamilton, and the same little lad—a Toronto lad, by the way—made good with a vengeance. The sending of Army Howard to the Olympic games from the northwest, is one of the latest instances, and the C.P.R. Angus Shops Athletic Association had a colored entry in the last Canadian Amateur Athletic championship games. The West End Y.M.C.A. Toronto, has an East Indian athlete, Bowie, who has competed many, many times locally.

Colored cricketers, tennis players, and gymnasium performers, mostly from South and Central America, have been frequent, but the best known colored Canadian athlete was probably Albert Lewis, of the Cornwall lacrosse team of some twenty years ago. His fame spread all over the land.

ONE OF OUR WORST WEEDS

An Experience in Destroying Quack Grass by Means of Sheep.

I have found a way of getting rid of that most noxious weed, quack grass, without labor, and at the same time not lose the use of the land, and also be a source of income. There are not many kinds of stock that like quack grass, but sheep will eat it right into the ground, and we all know if a plant is deprived of air and sun it will die.

If a field has become infested with quack it should be fenced and used as a pasture for sheep. They will keep it eaten down so close that in two, or at most three years, the quack grass will be killed out, and the droppings from the sheep will have enriched the soil so that a splendid crop of grain can be raised on it. Of course, when they get the grass eaten down close, another pasture should be alternated with this one, so the sheep may keep in good condition.

There is also, besides the income from the soil from the sheep, the income from the wool, and mutton, also increase in flock. I think it a surer, also more profitable, way to get rid of the pest than to try to kill it out by cultivating.—M. D. H.

FOREIGN BODY IN EAR

Children frequently put into their ears pebbles, beans, cherry stones, etc. Some insects find their way into the ear passage and create severe pain by their struggles. The insect is no respecter of age and frequently finds its way into the ear of a grown-up. Smooth, non-irritating bodies do no particular harm for some time. The most serious damage results often in the hurried, unskilled manner of attempting to remove such by persons who act immediately and incautiously in the belief that the removal must be made at once. Insects, of course, should be killed without delay. The simplest remedy is sweet oil, which should be dropped into the ear. Castor oil, linseed or even glycerin may be used. Then the insect should be removed in half an hour by syringing. When trying to remove a solid body turn the ear to be treated downward. Pull it outward and backward, rubbing the skin just in front of the opening into the ear with the other hand. The object may fall out. If this is not effective syringing may be tried. Supposing this second method does not prove successful, then get competent medical assistance at once.

HOW WOULD YOU LIKE OSTRICH PLUMES LIKE THIS ?

This picture gives a very good idea of what may be accomplished with the straight strip of featheriness. First it is curled around the hat, to form the trimming, and then, if the air is brisk and the breezes blowing, it is twisted lightly around the throat in the ordinary boa fashion. And on the other hand, when the day is fine and calm, it is perfectly proper to allow it to wave at will in a carelessly graceful "don't care a penny for expenses" fashion. If cost is no object, and a plume is used, it can be attached near the back of the hat and then allowed to hang as far as it will.

Cleaning Copper Kettles

Copper kettles soon become discolored when they have been in use for any length of time. Try cleaning them in the following way and you will get a beautiful polish: Dip a piece of lemon-rind into a little salt, and rub this well all over the surface of the kettle. Wipe it quickly off and polish with a dry chamois leather.

Pyorrhea is the frequent cause of loss of teeth by grown persons. Decay is the usual cause of such loss in children. Pyorrhea needs the most careful home treatment and the best care of a competent dentist.

POLO.

Meadowbrook, L. I., June 5.—Devereaux Milburn, back of the American polo team, was seriously injured in practice Saturday afternoon. His horse was tripped with the mallet, and in the fall Milburn was kicked in the head.

This is the second time that Milburn has been hurt during recent practice preliminary to the international matches.

The pony rolled on him in Saturday's fall, and, barely conscious, he was taken to the clubhouse in an automobile and revived. Physicians [illegible] were summoned.

Milburn was playing back for the Meadowbrook four against a pick-up team consisting of L. E. Stoddard, [illegible], M. S. Stevenson, and Foxhall Keene.

RING.

When Battling Nelson, at that time lightweight champion, was engaged in the work of preparing his book to be printed he was very careful and systematic about his work and had asked so many questions about the correct spelling of certain words that the sporting editor gave him a dictionary. One morning the sporting editor came in and found Bat poring over the dictionary.

"Say, Bill," said Bat, "this is a bum dictionary."

"What's the matter with it," asked the surprised writer.

"It's a phoney, that's all," replied Nelson. "I can't find anything in it that I want."

"What did you want to spell?"

"Why, I wanted to know how to spell 'imperial,' and I've looked through the E's from top to bottom and it ain't there."

"Why not look through the 'I's?" suggested the writer, and with his finger he ran down the 'I's,' and pointed out the word.

"Humph!" grunted the champion. "That's all right, but it's a shine book just the same. A guy has got to know how to spell a word before he looks for it, and if he knows what is the use of looking?"

One of the doctors who officiated at the autopsy held on Luther McCarty testified before the coroner's jury that McCarty's neck was broken before he entered the ring to box with Pelkey. The condition of the small fracture showed that it was made some weeks ago, and the jar of the light jab delivered by Pelkey, or a sudden movement of the head by McCarty, put a strain on the weakened vertebra that completed the fracture, with fatal result.

This is an important discovery, as it mitigates greatly the effect of the accident upon the sport of boxing. All the incidents before the bout support the doctor's theory.

First, McCarty complained during his training that he didn't feel well. He told one party that the altitude was affecting his heart; another that his stomach was not right. The slight injury to the spinal cord produced by a small adjacent fracture might account for his symptoms. This was soon after his arrival at Calgary, and his training was stopped for a couple of days until he felt better.

McCarty took great pride in his horsemanship. In New York he went through a lot of cowboy stunts just before leaving for Calgary. He galloped up and down the road near his training quarters, leaning down from the saddle and picking up hats and handkerchiefs from the ground while photographers snap-shotted him. He rode over the hills and jumped fences. He rode down to the City Hall to visit the mayor, and in a spirit of bravado spurred his horse up the City Hall steps to the doorway.

What is more likely than that in some of his wild cross country dashes he may have been thrown. He rode alone, and if he were thrown his pride certainly would have prevented his telling about it to any one, although he did say that once his horse fell with him. In this way he might easily enough have fractured the vertebra. The fracture was not quite enough to lay him out. If he had been cared for a few weeks it would have healed, his general health would have been as good as ever, and he had been hurt.

That theory clears up one of the greatest mysteries ever connected with ring affairs. It was absolutely impossible to imagine that Pelkey or any other boxer could possibly have broken the neck of a powerful man like McCarty with any blow—especially with the least forceful of all—a jab.

BASEBALL.

Fort Wayne, Ind., June 5.—Manager Edward Anderson, of the Terra Haute Central League Club, has been suspended by President Louis Heilbroner for his part in the fight here with Short-Stop Pick, of the Terra Haute Club. Anderson, it was charged, attacked Pick.

McGraw, Manager of Champion Giants, says:

"The Giants were not right a week ago, I'll admit that. In fact I did when I made the recent trade with Cincinnati by which I let one player go who helped me to win four championships, and another who had been on a team that had twice been returned a penant bringer. But I am not offering any alibis for the showing so far.

Plain facts are what count. One fact is that the club had not been hitting with any degree of regularity or timeliness. When the men have been hitting, the pitching has been bad, and when the pitching has been good, the hitting has been of the featherweight brand. Take, as an example, that game which Mathewson pitched against Boston last week as pretty a game as I ever saw him work. Several New York newspaper men with the team blamed a misplaced bat for beating us, because the winning and only run would not have been scored in the ninth inning if the ball, on a good throw home, had not struck Sweeney's stick where he dropped it in front of the plate, and been deflected. That was kind of the newspaper men. I do not blame the bat. It was poor baseball which beat my club in that game.

In the first place, I want players who will watch out for the little things, because the little things win games of baseball. That bat should have been kicked out of the way or picked up, so that it would not interfere with the throw. It was not. That is bad baseball. We should have won the game three times before the ninth inning, but bad baseball beat us out of our chances, men being caught off the bases, and such things. Behind most alibis you can discover plenty of poor playing.

Understand, I am not finding fault with the club for the benefit of the public. I do that sufficiently when we go into executive sessions after the games, and there have been several of those this season. But I do not want anybody to think that I am going to sit up and blame the umpires or old misfortune for the place my club occupies in the standing at present. Not on your life."

WELLAND SHIP CANAL.

Section No. 1.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned and marked "Tender for Section No. 1, Welland Ship Canal," will be received at this office until 16 o'clock on Thursday, July 17th, 1913.

Plans, Specifications and form of contract to be entered into can be seen on or after June 4th, at the office of the Chief Engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, and at the office of the Engineer in Charge, St. Catharines, Ontario.

Copies of plans, and specifications may be obtained from the Department on the payment of the sum of fifty dollars. To bona fide tenderers this amount will be refunded upon the return of the above in good condition.

Parties tendering will be required to accept the fair wages schedule prepared or to be prepared by the Department of Labour, which schedule will form part of the contract.

Contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms, and in the case of firms, unless there are attached the actual signature, the nature of the occupation, and place of residence of each member of the firm.

An accepted bank cheque for the sum of $200,000.00 made payable to the order of the Minister of Railways and Canals, must accompany each tender, which sum will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the work, at the rates stated in the offer submitted.

The cheque thus sent in will be returned to the respective contractors whose tenders are not accepted.

The cheque of the successful tenderer will be held as security, or part security, for the due fulfilment of the contract to be entered into.

The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

By order
L. K. JONES.
Asst. Deputy Minister and Secretary.
Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 2nd June, 1913.

Newspapers inserting this advertisement without authority from the Department will not be paid for it.—42003.

Slums and Crime

In opening the Dublin Sessions the City Recorder said a large percentage of the cases were the inevitable consequence of the poverty, intemperance, and slum environment of an old city. The reduction of the criminal calendar could be accomplished by drastic dealing with what was described by the Prime Minister as by far the greatest blot on their civilization—the want of provision of clean, decent, humanized housing environment for the poor and toiling masses.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Postal Station "G", Toronto, Ont.," will be received at this office until 4.00 P.M., on Wednesday, June 25th, 1913, for the construction of the building mentioned.

Plans, specification and form of contract can be seen and forms of tender obtained at the office of Mr. E. J. Lennox, Architect, 164 Bay St., Toronto, Ont., and at this Department.

Persons tendering are notified that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed forms supplied, and signed with their actual signatures, stating their occupations and places of residence. In the case of firms, the actual signature, the nature of the occupation, and place of residence of each member of the firm must be given.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, equal to ten per cent (10 p.c.) of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

Deceived by Appearances.

John Meipolder, superintendent of the Boys' club, is very fond of walking. Meipolder was camping recently north of Broad Ripple and decided to walk to Indianapolis. The roads were dusty and the sun beat down unrelentingly. When Meipolder reached Broad Ripple he had covered ten or twelve miles and looked like a tramp. Coming to a fork in the road, and not being sure of the correct route, Meipolder approached two girls and a young man sitting in the shade.

"Can you tell me how to get to Indianapolis?" he asked. The correct road was pointed out and as he started to plod on one of the girls said:

"Why you are not going to walk, are you?"

"Why, yes," said the pedestrian, "I thought I would."

The young man fumbled in his pocket. "Here," he said, fishing out a dime, "you better ride the street car in. You can catch it about a square up the road."

Then each girl handed him a coin. Meipolder thanked them kindly for their proferred assistance, but declined the offer, saying that he preferred to walk. When he started on they looked after him in open-eyed astonishment.—Indianapolis News.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Public Building, Sudbury, Ont.," will be received at this office until 4.00 P.M., on Monday, June 30, 1913, for the work mentioned.

Plans, specification and form of contract can be seen and forms of tender obtained at the office of Mr. Thos. Hastings, Clerk of Works, Postal Station "F", Yonge St., Toronto, at the Post Office, Sudbury, Ont., and at this Department.

Persons tendering are notified that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed form supplied, and signed with their actual signatures, stating their occupations and places of residence. In the case of firms, the actual signature, the nature of the occupation, and place of residence of each member of the firm must be given.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, equal to ten per cent (10 p.c.) of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. BRITISH CABINET AN INFORMAL BODY

The Ruling Body of England Has no Legal Standing—Absorbed Power Gradually

Sidney Low, the English writer, calls attention to the fact that the British Cabinet has really no standing in law, though it is actually the body which rules England. He makes several interesting statements in describing the situation.

The British Cabinet has long been one of the mysteries of that greater mystery, the British Constitution. To be quite exact, indeed, it is not correct to call it a part of the British Constitution, for strictly speaking it is unknown to the Constitution. The Cabinet to-day rules the country, but it has no legal status. It was not until some 10 or 12 years ago that the word "Cabinet" appeared on the notice paper or other official document.

A Cabinet Minister takes the same oath that every Privy Councilor takes "to be a true and faithful servant unto the King's Majesty as one of his Majesty's Privy Council" and to "keep secret all matters committed and revealed unto you or that shall be treated secretly in Council." The entire body of the Privy Council is supposed to advise the Sovereign on affairs of State; but to be made a Privy Councilor to-day is practically an empty honor. It is regarded as a high compliment but if a Privy Councilor is not a member of the Cabinet he performs no official functions.

All the executive and political functions of Privy Councilors have passed into the hands of those of them who form the Cabinet, which is really a secret committee of the King's servants who in practice collectively rule the country so long as they remain in office.

"But," as Sidney Low writes in an article in the London Daily Mail, "no act of Parliament ever gave them these powers, which could not be asserted or defended in any court of law. They are due to prescription, accident and custom.

"Technically the Cabinet as a Cabinet can do nothing. It cannot even write a letter or issue a signed order."

MODERN JUGGERNAUTS

Terrible Death Toll by Motor Vehicles in London's Thoroughfares

Figures published by the Home Office regarding the number of men, women and children killed and injured in the streets of London every week are startling.

During one year no fewer than 410 people met their death in the streets —while the street accidents reported by the police not ending fatally amounted to 15,154. This makes a total of 15,564 killed and injured, which works out at the rate of practically 300 a week.

Perhaps the most terrible feature of London's street accidents is that about one-third of the persons killed in the streets by motor and horse vehicles are children under the age of fifteen. In five years 312 children under seven and 238 between the ages of seven and fifteen were killed in the London streets—a terrible death-roll of 550.

Year by year the total number of killed and injured by vehicular traffic in London has gone up. Seven years ago the total number killed was 172, and injured 11,683, which means that there are now nearly two and a half times as many people killed and over 3,000 more injured every year.

Undoubtedly the chief cause of this fearful list of casualities is the rapid increase of motor vehicles. As a matter of fact, out of the 410 people killed last year there were only 122 fatalities caused by horse vehicles, the remainder being due to motor omnibuses, electric tramways, motor cars, cabs, etc.

It is this enormous increase in motor vehicular traffic which makes the streets of London veritable death traps. To lay the whole of the blame for this remarkable increase in the number of street accidents upon motor-driven vehicles is, of course, somewhat absurd, for while accidents, fatal and otherwise, have increased with the increase of motor cars, motor omnibuses, and electric tramways on the streets, there is no doubt that the chief reason lies in the fact that Londoners have not yet accommodated themselves to the changed condition of traffic.

Hundreds of suggestions have been made by various people for minimizing the perils of the streets, but perhaps the most interesting and valuable are those of the famous motorist Mr. Charles Jarrott. "No motor bus," says Mr. Jarrott, "should be capable of travelling at a speed of more than twelve miles an hour, or, at a maximum, fourteen."

Then, again, the habit of many drivers of rushing across main thoroughfares from side streets should be severely dealt with; likewise drivers on main thoroughfares crossing side-streets should be made to slow down. "I am convinced," says Mr. Jarrott, "that a few commonsense regulations drawn up by an experienced board would make for an improvement which would be welcomed by the general public, including pedestrians, ordinary drivers, cyclists, and motorists generally."

CHAMPION LAZY MEN

County Clare Native Went to Bed at Ten; Got up Twenty-nine Years later

The "won't works," many of whose [illegible] of laziness have been [illegible] in the police [illegible] in recent years, have [illegible] remarkable records of [illegible], says a London paper, but the case of a gardener who recently committed suicide out of sheer disinclination to go on working is surely unique.

This man did not mind starting a job, but he could never be induced to finish it, and he [illegible] one of the men about whom [illegible] recently complained to the magistrate at Wood Green Police Court. She described her husband as a piece-worker, and it seemed that he only worked on Wednesday, when it was his custom to put in two hours' toil.

Another case was that of a man sentenced to three years' penal servitude for theft. His age was 40, and it was stated that he had only done one day's work in his life. This was during the taxicab strike, when he wheeled a barrow of luggage from Charing Cross to Euston.

There are at least half a dozen claimants to the title of the laziest man in England. A good first would be the lazy man at Tottenham. Although he found it impossible to sleep all the 24 hours of the day, he tried very hard.

He was practically dragged from his bed to the police court by his indignant wife, but he promptly went back to bed again when he had been lectured by the magistrate and had paid the penalty of his idleness.

Then there was the County Clare man, who went to bed when he was 10 and did not get up until he was 39. Then for some mysterious reason he began to get bored. He rose from his couch in 1907, took to the strenuous life and was last heard of escorting a coal truck.

One man, brought up at the Willesden Police Court charged with sleeping out, actually fell asleep in the dock while the magistrate was pronouncing sentence.

Another man, who had not worked for so long that he had forgotten whether he was a gardener or a printer, when asked by the magistrate whether he had anything to say, replied with a drawl, "Hardly worth while," and disappeared with a yawn into the cells below.

Yet another case was that of the man of 50 who, when the policeman said he had never done a day's work in his life, protested indignantly that "he once did a bit of 'oppin."

HOUSE OF MYSTERY

Weird Jumble of Useless Things in Recluse Doctor's Home

A strange collection of articles, which the late Dr. John Phené hoarded in the rooms and grounds of his mystery house at Chelsea, came to light when the contents of Cheyne House was put up for auction. The seller's rostrum consisted of an old stone bridge. Behind rose the tall mass of the queer building, erected for a purpose which is not clear and decorated externally with the relics of a hundred antiquated places—odd columns and capitals, gargoyles and lamps—while round about lay the heaps of stones and classic statues, the masses of meaningless iron and marble, ecclesiastical symbols, baths, allegorical nymphs and cupids, and church furniture, which Dr. Phené made it his absorbing mission in life to collect.

He must have suffered from a mania for acquisition. There was a twelve foot figure of Queen Victoria crazily roofed over, two anvils, barrels and baths, a broken spinning wheel and a block of carved stone which nothing but a traction engine and a body of determined men could move.

It used to be rumored locally, and firmly believed, that a wedding breakfast, prepared many years ago, but never eaten, was rotting away in the darkness of one of the rooms. No proof of this was discovered, however.

In a second house there was the same evidence of collection without method; chairs, engravings, plaster casts, busts, stained glass, flag poles, window-panes, dust thick upon everything, balustrades incomplete and wrapped in worn-out paper. It was obviously never intended for a dwelling, and an inspection of it, of old Cheyne House and the depressing, statue-strewn surroundings created an unnatural atmosphere about the personality of the aged doctor who used to be led across from the residence opposite in Oakley street, where he lived, to sit and dream amongst his treasures.

Had Better Knowledge.

Lord Dufferin delivered an address before the Greek class of the McGill university, about which a reporter wrote: "His lordship spoke to the class in the purest ancient Greek, without mispronouncing a word or making the slightest grammatical solecism." "Good heavens!" remarked Sir Hector Langevin to the late Sir John A. McDonald, "how did the reporter know that?" "I told him," was the conservative statesman's answer. "But you don't know Greek." "True, but I know a little about politics."

BULGARIAN CZAR HAS FINE RECORD

Brought His Country out of Chaos Into State of Prosperity and Enlightenment.

The most outstanding figure among the rulers of the Balkan countries undoubtedly is Ferdinand, of Bulgaria. It is only a little over a quarter of a century since Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha assumed the duties of government in the principality which 21 years later he was to declare a kingdom. It was in July, 1887, that the Bulgarians elected him to the vacant throne, and on August 14th, at Tirnovo the ancient capital of the Bulgarian Czars, he took the oath to observe the Constitution of his adopted country. Just a week later he made his entry into Sofia, and assumed his new functions as ruler.

The task which lay before the young sovereign was no easy one. It was exactly a year since his predecessor, the gallant Prince Alexander, had been seized in his palace by the troops whom he had led to victory, compelled to sign his abdication, and transported to Russian soil at Reni. Throughout his reign of seven years Prince Alexander had been confronted with the problem of reconciling the determination of the Bulgarians to assert their independence with the claim of Russia to keep the newly liberated nation in leading-strings. He finally determined to adopt a national policy, and the part which he played in the Eastern Roumelian revolution sealed his fate.

Advised by His Mother

Prince Ferdinand in his early reign derived inestimable advantage from the counsels of his mother, Princess Clementine, a highly gifted lady, whom Gladstone described as one of the cleverest women in Europe. A daughter of King Louis Philippe of France, the Princess, while still a girl, was accustomed to advise her father on matters of State; she possessed a masculine strength of character, and a statesmanlike perspicacity of judgment, and it was largely owing to her initiative that her son embarked on his perilous adventure, which she was resolved to bring to a successful issue. Through her own or her husband's family she was connected with many of the principal sovereigns of Europe, including Queen Victoria, who was much attached to her; she was acquainted with most of the leading figures in the political world, and she skilfully utilized her relationships and friendships in her son's cause.

Proclamation of Independence

In 1908 it was widely felt in Bulgaria that the revolution in Turkey afforded a golden opportunity for the achievement of national unity, while the Prince, who noted the sympathy which the Young Turk movement had aroused in Europe, resolved on maintaining a policy of caution. But a slight put upon his representative at Constantinople by the new Turkish Government, and the action of the powers, who insisted that the Bulgarian portion of the Oriental Railway Company's line which had been seized by his Government should be restored to Turkey, produced a state of feeling in Bulgaria which could not be ignored, and on October 5, 1908, the Prince proclaimed at Tirnovo the independence of Bulgaria, and assumed the title of Czar of the Bulgarians.

Country Progressive

The progress of Bulgaria under Ferdinand has been extraordinary. The condition of the people has greatly improved; education has made wonderful strides, and the commercial and industrial development of the country has been equally rapid. The country has been covered with a network of railways, and new ports have been constructed at a heavy outlay. The dynasty is now firmly established, and its position has been further assured by the King's marriage with Princess Eleonore of Reuss-Kostritz, the present Queen whose beneficent activity in many directions has endeared her to the Bulgarian people.

WESTERN CHAMPION OF CANADIAN GIRL

Takes up Cudgels on Behalf of Her Sisters in the Dominion—A Curious Controversy

Letters have appeared in certain Scottish papers discussing the question as to whether or not English and Scotch girls are superior to the girls of Canada. One was printed from a resident of Montreal who declared that the Canadian lass is far inferior to her English or Scotch sister. To that letter an answer has been written by a Calgary young woman, prominent in Y.W.C.A. and other circles. Her letter follows:

Mrs. Malaprop says, "Comparisons are odorous," and it would seem rather invidious for a native-born Canadian to argue against the British girl, even though she should take up the cudgels in behalf of her own countrywomen.

May I point out that the average Canadian girl is the daughter of British parents, and therefore, cherishes British ideals, even though they are grafted on to broader and freer ideas of the new country. British conventionality does not always understand Canadian freedom of manner, nor does the Britisher comprehend the education of the Canadian girl which has been on the same plane as that of her brother. Men are not demigods to the Canadian girl, as they sometimes appear to be to the English woman. They're just men. The Englishman who has the idea that he is one of the "lords of creation," is apt to be taken down a bit by the careless treatment accorded him by the Canadian girl who abhors "swank."

In Great Britain, servants are cheap and numerous, and you very often hear an English girl who has come hold one afford only one maid, or none never before in her life did house work. She is ashamed of her hands and her clothes, and she does not know how to begin the work expected of her.

The Canadian girl is brought up to do home work from the time she can walk. The average Canadian household can afford only one maid, or none at all, and the daughter of the house sweeps, dusts, washes dishes, irons darns, cooks—in fact, does all sorts of work in the house. She is accustomed to Canadian conditions, a good housewife, and a good companion to her husband, because she has the broader viewpoint that co-education gives an intelligent mind.

She dresses more smartly than the English woman but she often makes her own clothes and she does not sacrifice her husband's income to the desire for finery. She knows how to cut her coat according to her cloth and she knows how to put on her clothes to the best advantage.

Whether mixed marriages of the native born to the British born are to the best advantage of either side is a moot question. Certainly the Canadian man thinks the Canadian girl is the only one in the world for him. Since he is satisfied and the British man is satisfied with the British girl, why argue about it? We might be generous enough to grant the girl of each country her own good qualities. After all, we belong to the same family, and we're all "sisters under the skin." We each can learn from the other, and we should be satisfied to live and let live.

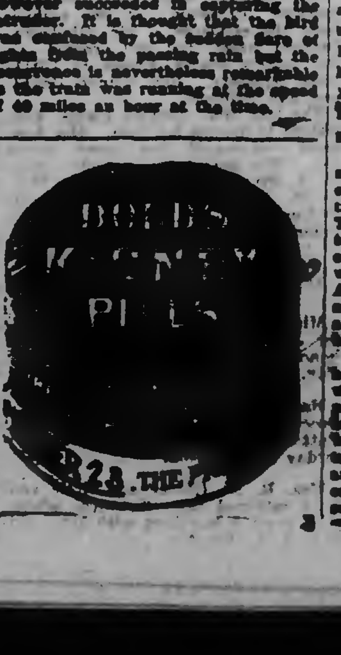
AN OWL INTRUDER

While a Grand Trunk train from Guelph to Toronto was running between Brampton and Georgetown the other night, an owl flew through one of the open windows, startling the passengers and the colored porter who however succeeded in capturing the intruder. It is thought that the bird was confused by the sudden flare of lights from the passing train but the occurrence is nevertheless remarkable as the train was running at the speed of 60 miles an hour at the time.



TRAGIC HISTORY OF MAD MONARCHS

Nominal King of Bavaria Eats Grass, Hates Soap and Shoots at Passing Peasants

The death of the aged Prince Regent of Bavaria, Leopold, who for over half a century governed Bavaria, first for King Ludwig II., and then for King Otto, his two mad nephews, recalls the unhappy lot of the royal family of that country.

Ludwig I. was, to say the least, eccentric. When he saw a beautiful face, no matter the station of the owner, he sent his Court artist to paint it. All these paintings are now in the Royal castle at Munich. Among them is a portrait of Lola Montez, the beautiful adventuress, of whom the King became so infatuated that he made her a countess and gave her a pension of 20,000 florins.

But the tragedy of the Bavarian Royal House really began with the accession to the throne in 1864 of Ludwig II., a grandson of Ludwig I. As a child he showed considerable mental instability, and during his boyhood, spent in the Bavarian Alps, his imagination was so stirred by legends of knights, mermaids, swans, and beautiful ladies, that by the time he came to the throne he was hopelessly insane.

Until then, owing to his secluded life, the people generally were not aware of his failing. Once he had been made King, however, it could no longer be concealed. He was betrothed to his cousin, Princess Sophia, but on the day before the wedding he refused to marry her, and ordered valuable portraits and sculptures of her to be destroyed. Princess Sophia afterwards became Duchess d'Alencon, and perished in the Paris charity bazaar fire.

Audience of One

The King would often refuse to receive foreign Rulers or diplomats because these ceremonies interrupted his literary studies, and he would frequently interrupt audiences with Ministers with quotations from Schiller. Later he developed a dislike of meeting people, declined to attend Church, and built himself a private chapel. The presence of the public in theatres also disturbed him, and he commanded operas and plays to be performed to him alone, with the auditorium in complete darkness, so that the actors had no idea where their audience of one sat. At midnight the mad King used to drive around in a sleigh in the form of a golden swan, with six swift horses attached to it.

At Court banquets the King believed he was on the way to the scaffold, and insisted upon being bidden behind banks of flowers. The music had to be of a thunderous character, and when it was not loud enough the King would strike the floor violently with his sword.

Eventually King Ludwig refused to associate with anybody except servants and stable lads, and Royal decrees were only issued through locked doors. He built himself magnificent residences in all directions. They were like fairy palaces, no expense being spared in order to secure the effects desired by the Royal lunatic.

It was really this extravagance in building that caused his dethronement. He was continually demanding increases in the Civil List, and if Ministers declined to meet his wishes he ordered their arrest or dismissal. So in June, 1886, he was dethroned, and Prince Leopold was appointed Regent. Ludwig was taken to the castle of Berg, but shortly afterwards he and his physician were found drowned in the Starnberger See. It is assumed that the King jumped into the water, and that the physician died in attempting to save him.

Shooting at Peasants

Ludwig was nominally succeeded by his brother Otto; but as Otto was also mad, Prince Leopold kept the Regency. King Otto's madness took the form of musical enthusiasm. Even now, in his castle prison at Fürstenried he spends most of his time awakening the echoes with the music of Verdi's operas.

The first symptoms of King Otto's madness were visible during the Franco-German war, when he called out a squad of cavalry to charge straight at a stone wall, which he insisted was a body of the enemy's infantry. He has the utmost horror of soap and water, and will seldom have his hair or his nails cut.

He often refuses his food, imagining it to be poisoned, and in order to keep him from starvation his attendants have to hide his food in places where he is sure to find it. Imagining it has been put there for someone else, he will then devour it without any scruple. Most of his time is spent smoking cigarettes or walking about the grounds of the Castle. He is fond of eating grass, and an attendant has to restrain this appetite.

One of his pastimes is shooting at passing peasants from the Castle windows with a rifle, which his attendants carefully load with harmless bullets.

ANIMALS LIKE TO PLAY

Some Appear to Have Real Games and Others Merely Frolic

"Many animals make it a part of their maternal duty to amuse their young," says the author of "Animals at Work and Play." He adds: "Even a ferret will play with her ferocious little kittens just as a cat will with hers." The same author very interestingly describes the game of "I'm the King of the Castle," as he saw it played by some lambs.

One lamb mounted a pile of straw and rubbish, and immediately his comrades "stormed" his castle, and tried to push him from his stronghold. The one that succeeded had a chance to defend the position as the former one had done, and the performance was kept up until all were tired out. A steeplechase was another exciting amusement. In this they jumped over a row of old food boxes as they ran back and forth across the farmyard.

For genuine amusement in the home, says St. Nicholas, select two well matched kittens and set them to playing—or they will do it without asking. The dancy "feats" they make with ears tucked back, as they wait to dance in with each other, are very amusing. It seems strange that they can keep such serious faces themselves while carrying on such funny performances. But we must remember that all their quick attacks and stealthy actions while at play are training them for more serious business in later life.

Dogs get a great deal of exercise in their play, but they are not so sly nor so graceful as members of the cat family. My dog has "killed" many a rag while playing at rat catching. Dogs seem to obtain great enjoyment from their play. Their capers with a stick thrown for them to bring back from the land of water have amused many a small master. Little pigs play with as much vigor and dexterity as any animals that I have ever seen; but later in life this capacity entirely disappears.

While some young animals enjoy playing with one another there are others which seem to prefer to play alone. Rabbits appear to belong to this latter class. Many times I have seen young rabbits amuse themselves by suddenly starting off from where they were nibbling grass, and going "like lightning" for ten or more feet, then, with a sharp turn, come back with a leap in the air and snap about again for another run. Suddenly they will stop and listen, then shoot off again and turn themselves in the air with a kick of the hind feet as they skim over the ground.

Chickens perform most absurdly in the barnyard. Rooks are said to go through an elaborate performance of "killing" a biscuit before eating it. Tame sea gulls play a game with sticks and stones, throwing them into the air and catching them in their beaks as they would fish. In the zoo monkeys are the master players, but they have their rivals in the tumbling bears, the dancing ostriches, the spouting and driving sea lions. In fact the inhabitants of every enclosure "get gay" at one time or another.

WAS FINE OFFICER

Young Mounted Policeman Murdered by Indians—Played Man's Part

The story of the murder of Constable Frank W. Davies near Southesk, Alta., by three Indains whom he tried to arrest, is another illustration of how well young Englishmen can serve the Empire even when engaged on such an ordinary vocation as that of a constable of he mounted police.

He came out from London, England some five years ago and started farming at or near Wadena, Sask., but evidently soon tired of that task, because in April, 19009, he applied for admission into the Mounted Police and was sworn in on the 9th of that month. Then he gave his age as twenty-five.

Davies was one of those young Britishers who play the game like men. They know their duty and do it even if death be the reward.

Prior to starting out on what proved to be his last case he had been around the town joking and talking to the boys with whom he was a universal favorite. Just at dusk a terrified Indian hurried into the town. He located the constable, and, in broken language told him that two Indians and a "breed" had shot several times at him, at the same time pointing to bullet holes in his hat, coat sleeve, and in a bundle of blankets he carried. The officer immediately started after them and that was the last seen of him alive.

BRIDAL SUPERSTITIONS

There are many matters upon which the luck of the bride and groom are supposed to hang.

Should a cat sneeze the day before her marriage the bride is sure to be happy.

It is very lucky to meet a dog, cat, lizard, serpent, spider or toad on the way to one's wedding, but no dog should be allowed to go between the bride and groom.

No bride should sew upon her own wedding dress nor should she try it on after it is finished—the last fitting should take place while the gown is still a few stitches short of completion. It is more auspicious, also, for the bride to have some detail of her costume lacking when she takes her last look in the glass before the wedding ceremony. It is unlucky to have a wedding gown sewn on unless a piece of wood is held in the mouth during the process.

The bride must put on her slippers without "horn or lace" or the witches will play tricks.

It is lucky to weep on one's wedding day.

Lilacs are unlucky at a wedding, orange blossoms signify hope, and the laurel triumph.

The guests also contribute to the luck of a wedding. An odd number is inauspicious and they must not wear green for it is the fairies' color and whoever wears it at a marriage will be overtaken with disaster. In Scotland even green vegetables are often barred from a wedding feast. Black is also an unlucky color for a guests to wear.

The bride must enter the church with her right foot first.

A German custom required the bride, after the ceremony, to toss her shoe to the guests and whoever caught it would be the first married. This superstition takes the form, in this country, of the throwing of the bridal bouquet, which is sometimes made up of several parts so that a number may share in the good omen.

The throwing of rice is a custom derived from India, where it was usual to enclose a few grains of some cereal with the wedding invitation as a symbol of abundance. The old shoe is lucky, the older the luckier, and has been combined with the rice idea in the novel form of a tiny paper shoe, filled with rice, which breaks when it reaches its aim and scatters the grains over the retreating bridal couple.

If grey horses can be procured for the bride's carriage, much good fortune will attend her through life.

The happy pair should never sail down stream on their honeymoon, but to sail upstream is quite propitious.

These superstitions may be used to add picturesqueness and merriment to the wedding festivities, but to take any of them seriously would detract much from the happiness of the occasion.

Horses and Fodder.

To prevent a horse eating too rapidly an Oregon man has patented a food bag that permits only a small amount of grain to reach an animal's mouth from the main supply at a time.

New Fly Paper.

To a Wisconsin woman has been granted a patent upon sticky fly paper made in long strips and rolled within cylindrical drums, permitting the exposure of small portions at a time and their easy removal.

ENORMOUS COST OF EUROPEAN WAR

Industry Would be Paralyzed and Maintenance of Armies Would Require Immense Outlay

What would be the cost of a present day war if it involved several of the great European powers? This question aroused much discussion in the economic circles in Paris and the Gaulois printed some interesting opinions on that subject from recognized experts on such problems.

The most striking of these was that of M. Jules Roche, former Minister of Commerce, who made some remarkable calculations on the point. Taking as a basis the expense incurred by France during the war of 1870, he reckons that, assuming for the sake of example, that the six nations of the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente went to war, the cost of maintaining the armies alone would work out at no less than $5,400,000,000 a month, without taking into account the other expenses.

"And what would be their internal condition?" he asks. "The belligerent nations would be struck with general paralysis, and would see their very means of subsistence disappear. Suspension of work would be forced even on those who were not included in the general mobilization since whom would there be to work for? To whom would they sell their products? How could they be exchanged or transported? All the large works and factories where the division of labor is completed would have to be shut. Even agriculture would be impossible.

"No more purchase or sales, either the economic or the financial death of labor, an abrupt stoppage of the heart's action in the national organism of all the nations at war, with profound reaction on all others—such would be the consequences of a general conflagration in the present conditions of European civilization."

Similar opinions are held by Paul Leroy-Beaulieu, member of the Institute, and one of France's leading economists. He thinks, however, that in such a crisis France would suffer less than the other great powers, since being self-supporting, she always has at her disposal an immense accumulation of agricultural products of the previous year whereupon she could draw for a long period. She would thus be in far better circumstances than Germany, for instance, which would find the greatest difficulty in obtaining imports, being cut off by the English fleet on the one hand and by Russia on the other.

"But," he adds, "it is after the war that the vanquished nations would have the hardest times, for many years would be necessary to repair the losses and heal the wounds."

Alfred Neymarck, vice-president of the Society of Political Economy, after pointing out the huge magnitude of commercial, industrial and financial expansion in credit and business generally among the six nations which would be engaged, asserts that the consequences of an abrupt cessation of all this activity through a general war would be incalculable in its vastness.

THE OLDEST MUSEUM

It is Located in Japan and Has Existed Hundreds of Years

Dr. Otto Kummel, head of the East Asiatic department of the Berlin Museum of Ethnology, tells of the oldest museum in the world, in the bulletin of the Societe Franco-Japonaise. This museum may be found in the city of Nara, the former capital of Japan. Since its foundation in 756 it went through all the changes of the Japanese empire without one single addition to its collection. Dr. Otto Kummel is one of the few Europeans who were permitted to visit this museum. It opens its door but once a year, on a day in spring, when a special committee inspects the collection, and a new list is made out. The museum contains about 3,000 articles.

An Imperial Exhibition

An imperial exhibition, adequately representing all parts of the British Empire, will be held in 1915, if the plans of a committee recently organized in London do not miscarry. The chairman of the committee is Captain Sir Peter Stewart Bam, and it is stated, that Lord Strathcona approves of the scheme. Such an exhibition would give the colonies an opportunity to display their manufactures in the United Kingdom.

Zealous Cop Stung.

A Lindsay painter had shipped two big jars of alcohol and shellac to Bobcaygeon, where he had a painting contract of several weeks duration. An over-zealous cop at the Rock City recognized the familiar fumes of alcohol and seized the goods as whiskey in a local option town. It is needless to say that apologies were in order after the affair was cleared up.

Stole Railway Coal.

A local woman was charged with carrying away coal belonging to the C. P. R. The prisoner said her husband is a schoolteacher in the North-west. She said her children had picked up coal on thetracks, that had mon custom for people to pick up mon custim for people to pick up such coal. She thought the C.P.R. would be glad to get the coal out of the way. A C.P.R. officer said the coal was taken from a bin at the round house. The woman was allowed to go provided she stopped her children taking the coal.

Lindsay Man's Narrow Call

Lindsay Post: Last night Mr. Phillip Gray, employed at the Flavelles Limited egg house, had a narrow escape from a terrible death. He was engaged in putting on a belt when his clothes became entangled. He was whirled by the revolving shafting, but had the presence of mind to grab a post and thus save his life. All his clothes were practically torn from his body, in his terrible fight for freedom, and he also sustained some serious injuries which will lay him up for some weeks.

Romaine's Chimney Going.

One of Peterborough's old and most striking landmarks is to pass into the sweet subsequently. A few of our older citizens will remember that some 35 years ago, Robert Romaine operated a brick factory on George street near the C.P.R. Station. The clay was brought in barges from some miles down the river and made into bricks here. To give draught sufficient for operating the plant, the big chimney containing 200,000 bricks and 125 feet high was erected.

The work of taking the chimney down has been let to a contractor of Lindsay. It is the intention of the man in charge, to throw the chimney northward. A large cavity will be made at the north side and screw jacks will be applied to the south side of the stack. By this means the stack will be toppled over.

WEDDING BELLS.

Heard—Rose.

The marriage was quietly solemnized yesterday morning at Knox church manse, by Rev. H. J. Keith, of Miss Gladys Rose, Peterborough, to Mr. Heard, of George street. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Florence Rose, while Mr. Arthur Heard supported the groom. The bride wore her travelling suit of navy blue with hat to match.

Mr. and Mrs. Heard left on a honeymoon trip to Toronto and Buffalo. Returning they will reside at 290 George street.

Hagan—Garvey.

A pretty wedding was solemnized yesterday morning in Sacred Heart church by Rev. Dr. O'Brien, when Miss Joan Garvey, daughter of Mr. P. J. Garvey, 184 Wescott street, became the charming bride of E. J. Hagan, M.D., of Williston, N.D.

The bride was becomingly attired in cream charmeuse, with pearl trimmings. She wore a burnt leghorn hat with rose plumes, and was attended by her sister, Miss Marie Garvey of Detroit, who was charmingly attired in yellow satin, with hat of same color. Mr. J. J. Garvey of Williston, N.D., brother of the bride, was groomsman.

After the ceremony the bridal party drove to the home of the bride's father, where a recherche breakfast was served. Mr. and Mrs. Hagan left on the 11.43 C.P.R. train for Montreal, from where they will sail for Heidelburg, Germany. Williston will be their home when they return.

DEATHS AND FUNERALS

Miss Pearl Irene Carver.

Miss Pearl Irene Carver, youngest daughter of Mr. Conway Carver, passed away Wednesday evening at 592 Charlotte street. She leaves to mourn her death her father and one sister, anh one brother, Miss Alice and Mr. Harry Carver. Her mother predeceased her two years last March.

Mrs. Geo. W. Rubidge.

Yesterday at noon, one of the best known and most highly respected ladies of Peterborough passed away, in the person of Mrs. George W. Rubidge. Mrs. Rubidge previous to her marriage was Miss Clara Annette Ullyot, daughter of the late Dalton Ullyot, one of Peterborough's leading lumbermen. She has been ill for some months and died at the home of her brother-in-law, Mr. George Gladman, Dickson street.

The deceased was well known in Peterborough's social circles, and took an active interest in the church work of St. John's.

The funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock from the residence of Mr. Gladman, Dickson street, and will proceed to St. John's church, thence to Little Lake cemetery. Rev. Canon Davidson will officiate.

The late Mrs. Rubidge leaves four sisters to mourn her loss. Her husband predeceased her some years ago. The sisters are, namely, Mrs. M. A. Fitzgerald, Parry Sound; Mrs. D. M. Stapleton, Toronto; Mrs. D. J. Lundy and Mrs. Gladman, both of Peterborough.

FIVE MINUTE CURE IF STOMACH IS BAD

When "Pape's Diapepsin" reaches stomach all Indigestion, Gas and Sourness disappears.

You don't want a slow remedy when your stomach is bad—or an uncertain one—or a harmful one—your stomach is too valuable; you mustn't injure it with drastic drugs.

Pape's Diapepsin is noted for its speed in giving relief; its harmlessness; its certain unfailing action in regulating sick, sour, gassy stomachs Its millions of cures in indigestion, dyspepsia, gastritis and other stomach trouble has made it famous the world over.

Keep this perfect stomach doctor in your home—keep it handy — get a large fifty-cent case from any drug store and then if anyone should eat something which doesn't agree with them; if what they eat lays like lead, ferments and sours and forms gas; causes headache, dizziness and nausea; eructations of acid and undigested food—remember as soon as Pape's Diapepsin comes in contact with the stomach all such distress vanishes. Its promptness, certainty and ease in overcoming the worst stomach disorders is a revelation to those who try it.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

BAD FLAVORS IN BUTTER

English Writer's Hint as to Avoidance of Turnip Taint

A good way to prevent the taint of swedes or turnips appearing in butter is to scald the cream a couple of days before churning. This is done by putting the cream vessel into a furnace of boiling water, and allowing it to remain there until the cream reaches a temperature of 176 degrees Fahrenheit. The cream must be frequently stirred during the process, or the sides and top will be many degrees warmer than the interior. When the cream is removed from the furnace, it should be passed through a strainer, and then be put in a place where dust and dirt cannot get in, for scalded cream does not strain easily after it gets cool. But it is a mistake to give everything to the cows which comes out of a root field, as many do. Roots which have been forced too fast by abundant dressings of artificial manure are often decaying when they are brought into the cow shed, and food of his kind is not suitable for milch cows. Decayed leaves, too, are sure to taint the butter worse than wholesome roots alone. But if sound swedes alone are given in moderate quantities, the milk supply will be maintained, and if the cream be scalded as above directed, there need be no fear of taint.—Staffs, in Farm and Home, England.

The 1913 edition of an attractive Grand Trunk Railway publication has just made its appearance. "Timagami," as the name would suggest, deals with that unspoiled wilderness of Northern Ontario known as the Timagami Forest Reserve, and has been brought completely up-to-date, both as regards matter and illustrations. The folder will meet the requirements of any one in search of information about this delightful holiday ground, as apart from the description of the territory itself full information is afforded as to guides, game and fish, fishing and hunting regulations, routes, etc. A particularly valuable feature of the publication is a large map which gives at a glance the clearest possible idea of the character of the whole Reserve.

CHARITY BEGINS AT HOME

This City seems to be running a mad riot of extravagance in raising the taxes to procure factories, but is neglecting the people who are now paying 25 mills on the dollar. Even little Lindsay has arranged to have her streets paved. Lindsay is arranging to have a new system of electric lights installed for street illumination. Peterborough, with a result of selling vacant lots in the suburbs, is rapidly making it a poor investment to erect houses. Peterborough has one highway (Chambers Street), one short block in length, paved, with visionary ideas about changing our 9th Concession style of roadbeds for pavements, possibly when we reach the 40,000 population mark. Whilst these factories, looking for the highest bidder, occasionally come to this City to locate, our street lighting is the same as it has been for years. Peterborough has one of the best park systems of any City of our size. Victoria Park, then which no City of any population has a prettier breathing spot, is dark, and consequently dangerous at night. If Peterborough had the enterprise of Lindsay, Victoria Park, as well as the other parks, would not only be lighted at night, but would be strung with wires carrying lights of rainbow hue. Let us pay a little more attention to the man paying the taxes now, whilst waiting for new factories.

It might be added that Lindsay Warder of May 31st concerning a banquet to the Town Council, in reporting a speech made, says:

"The Council this year, I think are about as good a lot that the town has ever had. The members are working honestly and conscientiously and during the present term have taken up the question of good roads, better lights and good sidewalks, and will carry out many improvements. I think a wise selection was made in the matter of street pavior, and I might say, also, that the Council are almost a unit in the question of having the best light we can get from station to station, and on Kent Street. In fact, all the streets should be well lighted"

GRAND OLD CHIEFTAIN IS STILL PROMINENT WITH US

Thousands Honored the Memory of Sir John A. Macdonald This Afternoon

Toronto, June 6.—Almost hidden beneath the heap of floral tributes that had been sent from loyal Conservatives from all parts of the country, the statute of Sir John A. Macdonald in Queen's Park looked out this afternoon on the thousands who had gathered to do honor to the memory of the illustrious statesman on the occasion of the twenty-second anniversary of his death. The velvet sward of Queen's Park was thronged with the members of the city Conservative organizations, each bearing the little blue shield that bore on it the inscription, "The Borden Naval Policy for Canada and the Empire." the slogan that shows how the Conservatives of Canada to-day are fighting for the same principles that Sir John stood for when he declared "A British subject I was born, a British subject I will die."

A Great Demonstration

The huge enclosure that had been roped off to accommodate the members of the Centre and South Toronto Conservative Club was filled to overflowing, and far away over the stretches of the Park reached the crowd, that had gathered to make a demonstration of Sonservative principles and listen to the leaders of the cause.

Premier Borden, Sir John's great successor sent a stirring message that was received with enthusiastic plaudits, and other leaders of the party throughout the Dominion sent their messages.

VERSAILLES BALL, CHIEF SOCIAL EVENT OF "SEASON"

London, June 6.—The spirit of Louis XIV filled the Albert Hall last night, when the Versailles Ball took place in the presence of Queen Mary, the Duke of Connaught, Prince Arthur and Princess Patricia of Connaught, the Battenburg's, the Schleswig-Holstein's and other Royalty. The Hall was decorated with gold in the cipher of the French King, and with mimic crowns on a white ground, while at one end on a throne under a blue canopy with fleur de lis, King Louis sat with his consort, surrounded by five hundred society folk, forming a mimic court of the seventeenth century.

The hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, in golden coat and blue robes of state, played Louis while the Countess of Dudley was Queen Marie Therese. The famous beauties, Viscountess Durson, Mrs. John Astor and Lady Diana Manners were respectively, Mesdames de Montespan, de Maintenon and Louise de la Valliere.

The procession passed amid outbursts of applause, and even the Shakespeare ball did not approach in beauty and magnificence this great charity fete.

A flurry of alarm was perceptible when the Queen arrived, lest the suffragettes might choose the occasion for another outrage, but they made no attempt to spoil the evening and the Queen, with evident delight, watched the stately court of Louis XIV.

REFORMERS HUMILATE US IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD

The British Government Has Undertaken the Duty of Canada

Ottawa, June 6.—Following his announcement in the House this afternoon that his Government intended at a later date to bring down a proposal for the acquiring or construction of three battleships as was proposed by the Naval Bill of 1912, Mr. Borden declared that the announced attention of the British Government to build the three Dreadnoughts provided for in the Canadian navy bill shattered every argument and contention on the part of those who reiterated that there was no emergency. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his followers had been ready to guarantee the peace of the world; had imagined themselves possessed of the secrets of the Chancellories of Europe. Plainly that had been irresponsible vaporings on their part and the most convincing proof of it was the action the Government of the United Kingdom had been forced to take in view of their action. It was an unfortunate condition in which the Bill had been left, continued the Prime Minister, and intensely humiliating to the people of Canada. It would prevent the Dominion at the present time undertaking that duty which the majority of the people were willing and desirous of accepting.

Canada's Duty

It appeared from the press despatches that the British Government has undertaken the duty which ought to have been discharged by Canada.

"The defeat of this measure by the Liberal majority at the direction of the Leader of the Opposition prevents us from arranging that the British Government shall proceed with the construction of the ships on behalf of Canada," said Mr. Borden "Technically, Parliament has defeated this Bill, but really it has been refused by a partisan majority in the Senate at the dictation of the Right Honorable Gentlemen without respect to the will of the people of Canada."

Sir Wilfrid rising declared that in his opinion the Senate had done nothing but defend the rights of the people of Canada as against a servile majority in the House of Commons.

A $65,000 Custom House

A despatch was received last night by The Times from Mr. J. H. Burnham, M. P., stating that on his return to Peterborough a site is to be selected for the new Custom House on which a $65,000 building will be placed. This will give employment to a considerable number of mechanics while being constructed. Great credit is due our local member for securing this large grant.

HEIRARCHY BOYCOTT MASONIC BUILDING

Called Roman Catholics off Word and Said God Punished One Who Stayed.

Ottawa, June 3.—The Masonic building now nearing completion on Metcalf Street was put under the ban some time ago and all the Catholic workmen called off by the priests Three men refused to be dictated to and continued working. One of these was unfortunate enough to fall from the fifth flat and was fatally injured. Immediately the cry went up from the priests that it was a positive sign of God's punishment for refusing to obey their orders.

Since then the Department of Interior decided to rent two flats in the same building, but such pressure was brought to bear by the Roman Catholics in the Government that the idea was abandoned.

POWER COM. IN SESSION

Price of Cable Has Advanced Nine-Tenths of a Cent

Work On Hydro-Electric Will Be Commenced Within Two Weeks—Slatting of Combination Iron Poles to Be Done in Town. Looking Forward to Street Paving.

The City Council's Power Committee met last night, Chairman Ald. Johnston presiding. There were also in attendance Mayor W. H. Bradburn Aldermen Buller, Gordon and Duncan.

Engineer Jeffery reported that the engineer he had calculated on hiring at $125 a month to supervise the construction of the Hydro-Electric system in this city, had been retained by his firm at $150 a month; hence he had engaged a young engineer at $80 a month, relying on the employment of a higher priced foreman of construction than before contemplated. Also that between the time of receiving prices and awarding the contract for cable, the price had advanced by nine-tenths of a cent per foot; consequently he had been obliged to place his order for cable at the advanced price.

The chairman was authorized to secure a store-house.

The matter of arranging for a railway siding and yard for the handling of wire poles from freight cars, was left in the chairman's hands. The slatting of these iron poles will be done in town.

On motion of Alderman Gordon and Duncan, the chairman was instructed to report on eligible candidates for the position of foreman of Hydro-Electric construction work.

Engineer Jeffery reported that the Bell Telephone Co. will need three poles on Charlotte street, one on George, near the C.P.R. and one on George near the Y.M.C.A. for a distributing service in connection with their underground conduits.

In regard to street paving, Mr. Jeffery said he will have to road clear for paving within two months, providing no delay occurs in the delivery of lighting cable.

WOMAN ACCUSED OF POISONING

Mrs. Fredgeick E. Beemer is Arrested, Charged With Murder.

Woodstock, June 6.—Charged with the murder of her husband by administering poison. Mrs. Fred E. Beemer of Drumbo, was this morning arrested by County Constable Markle and lodged in the local jail. The arrest was made following an investigation conducted by Provincial Detective Reburn.

Mrs. Beemer was a niece of her husband, and their marriage some years ago was the cause of considerable comment. A large family of small children is left at home. The prisoner was arranged before Police Magistrate A. S. Ball this morning, and remanded for one week.

It is understood the Bank will replace the present building by a handsome and commodious structure, built specially for their own use.

PETERBOROUGH IS CHOSEN BIG SHOW'S HEADQUARTERS

Former Local Man Will Bring His Huge Indian Congress and Wild West Show, With Many Private Cars Here

Adverting to a letter in yesterdays Times regarding a big Wild West Show, owned by Mr. W. C. Fleming, an old Peterborough boy we add the following.

W. C. Fleming, of Peterborough, who is extensively interested in a large vaudeville circuit in Ohio, Illinois, Indiana and New York, is launching a Hippodrome Wild West and Indian Congress. The aggregation will play exclusively Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba and British Columbia.

Messrs. Fleming Bros. have already placed orders for five 65 ft. flat cars, three 70 ft. stock cars and two 70 ft. sleepers. These cars are being built under special orders and will be handsomely designed and constructed. Much care will be taken in making these cars the most beautiful, as well as the most serviceable on the road.

Mr. Geo. M. Downs, Jr., official representative of the Fleming Bros. Hippodrome Wild West and Indian Congress, has been very successful in purchasing at Bliss, Okla., one of the Dead Wood Cradle Stage Coaches, which will be one of the chief attractions of the Fleming Bros. show. The coach is over one hundred years of age, and is well preserved. Many historical tales of the Wild West are attached.

The Hippodrome Wild West and Indian Congress, as designed by its proprietors and founders, Messrs. Fleming Bros., take this form to familiarize those who only know them through the columns of newspapers and books. Mr. W. C. Fleming, has been among the Indians in the territories, the trappers on the frontier, the pioneers in the wilderness of the far west. Fleming undesstands the characteristics, traits and ramifications of the Indian races. Fleming was associated in an official capacity with Barum and Bailey for a period of nine years, later, with Buffalo Bill for three seasons. He was founder of Mohawk Pines Park at Troy, N. Y. The Hippodrome Wild West and Indian Congress will be under the personal direction of W. C. Fleming.

Negotiations are now being made to open executive offices in Peterborough, sometime in July. The establishment of these offices will bring Fleming back to his native town, thereby becoming associated with his former colleagues. By way of description of the city of Peterborough, it is one of the best railroad centers in Canada, affording the most adequate facilities for winter quarters.

Now in course of construction are band wagons, chariots, steam calliopes and circus wagons, in Cleveland and Cincinnati. Everything else to complete the entire paraphernalia will be purchased in Canada and will be in readiness to open in glittering

BORDEN'S NAVY BILL TO COME UP AT NEXT SESSION

Government is Determined to Pass Measure for Imperial Defence

Ottawa, June 6.—That the Government intends at a later date to bring down legislation providing for the carrying out of the Naval Bill providing for the acquiring or construction of three first-class battleships was the clear and emphatic declaration made by Premier Borden in the House this morning. The statement came in answer to a query of Sir Wilfrid Laurier regarding the future policy of the Government.

"In view of the fact that our proposals were made on the basis of information supplied to us by the British Admiralty," said the Premier. "It may yet be possible to make right that which has been made wrong. Press despatches state that the three ships which Canada was to have constructed will be build by the British taxpayers. It is impossible to make any advances to that and because technically the bill has been defeated by Parliament though really only by a few partisans who do not represent the real desires of the Canadian people.

Pay for the Ships

"As these ships will now be built by the Admiralty are to be the same type as those prosed and are to be used for the same purpose. I say that it is the intention of this Government, if it remains in power, as it undoubtedly will, to bring down at a later date a proposal for the acquiring or construction of three battleships as was proposed by the Naval Aid Bill of 1912 and we hope that before the completion of these ships that we shall be able to do that which a partisan majority in the Senate prevented us from doing. We shall take over and pay for these ships for the use of his Majesty for the common defence of the Empire."

THE MOTHER LAND MUST BEAR DEFENCE ONUS HERSELF

London, June 6.—The Toronto correspondent of The Times says this morning: "Outside of the ranks of active partisans there will be a deep and angry feeling that the humiliation of Canada is now complete, and that we have lowered our prestige throughout the whole Empire by a miserable party quarrel."

Criticisms at home, however do not follow this line. The editorials in to-day's newspapers are chiefly devoted to discussion as to whether Mr Churchill's proposals are adequate in the changed circumstances The The Times, for instance, regarding Canaada, says: "The political controversy there should take its course free from any suggestion, however shadowy of Imperial influence. The British Government has provided for the benefit of the Canadian people, and at the request of their elected representatives all information on matters of fact which is necessary to a clear understanding of the naval problem. This much is now clear, that no naval policy, whether temporary or permanent, can be carried into effect without reference to the electorate, whether or not the reference is made at once or in what form, are matters entirely outside the scope of Inter-Imperial discussion."

LIBERALS AND PARCEL POST

The harm done by partisanship is exemplified by the Opposition at Ottawa to postpone the Parcels Post bill. Regarding this Hansard's report of Mr. Burnham's is as follows:

MR. BURNHAM (West Peterborough): In view of what has been said before in the way of encouraging the Postmaster General to bring on this bill, the actions of the members of the Opposition at this time seem very strange. There must be some objection to the passing of this bill which we do not see at the present time. Allow me to say in my humble way that the people of this country are so anxious for parcel post that they would rather take only a fairly good system than have none at all; half a loaf is Much better than no bread. I have yet to see that the objections that have been made by members of the Opposition who have spoken are not met by section 5:

The rates of postage applicable to post parcels shall be determined by the Postmaster-General, and all powers which the Postmaster-General now has with regard to mail matter are hereby vested in him for the parcel post system.

There is nothing new about this provision; it simply enlarges the scope of the present powers of the Postmaster General. To urge that this bill should be postponed in order that a parcel post system should be devised is simply to put off the interests of the people—I make no insinuations—it is to put off the just demands of the people of Canada in the interests of the express companies.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall this Bill be read the third time?
Mr. MACDONALD: At the next sitting of the House.
Mr. PELLETIER: Now.

PINE TAR CORDIAL

Advertisements under above heads, 20 words and under, one insertion, 15c.; 3 insertions, 25c.; 6 insertions, 40c.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 75c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 75c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., [illegible] George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

The King's Pigeons

Just recently King George has constructed a magnificent new pigeon loft in place of the old one standing at Sandringham. King George's original loft was a cottage with an aviary attached to one of the lower rooms in which the birds could take air when not at liberty, but the new loft has been designed by Mr. J. Walter Jones, the Sandringham schoolmaster, who is the trainer of the Royal pigeons; and there is most excellent accommodation for the birds. The loft is divided into three parts; one part is set aside for stock birds—that is to say, the pigeons that are kept to breed the racers. The largest part of the loft is for the racing pigeons that have to fly in competitions; and the other portion is for the youngsters.

The new Royal loft is in the form of the letter L, twenty-eight feet one way and twenty feet the other, while the centre of the "L" is filled in by an aviary twelve feet wide. There are thirty-six nest boxes in the old-bird loft, and sixteen in the stock-bird loft, so that accommodation is provided in the new Royal pigeon loft for fifty-two pairs of racing pigeons. The interior of the new pigeon loft is seven feet from floor to ceiling, and the roof is flat, and in order that when the birds arrive home from training and racing, there may be no time wasted the entrance is fitted with an electrical appliance that notifies at once when the birds have entered.

There is no doubt that the association of King George with the sport of pigeon racing, like the association of the late King Edward, has done much to give an impetus to the sport. It is only further evidence of the interest the King takes in his subjects' pastimes, and it can be truly said there is no more honest pastime than pigeon racing, because it requires much study to breed and produce birds endowed with such a high degree of intelligence as racing pigeons. Not only must their intelligence be cultivated and improved, but also their physical properties must be brought to the best possible state of perfection.

An Ants' Sewing Circle

German naturalists on their return from Ceylon reported the existence of a species of ant that was observed in the act of sewing two leaves together for the purpose of forming a nest. This report confirms the observations of the English naturalist, Ridley, made in 1890.

They saw a row of insects pulling the edges of leaves together; then others trimming and fitting the edges; and finally the completion of the work by still other ants which fastened the edges with a silky thread yielded by larvæ of the same species, the workers carried in the mandibles. It is said that the sewing ants pass the thread-giving larvæ like shuttles through holes in the edges of the leaves.

Italian Convict Gets His Liberty And a Bride in One Happy Day

About eight years ago a young Italian, Michael Pizzulli by name, belonging to a well-to-do family of Ginosa, near Taranto, fell madly in love with Maria Montrone, a little girl only ten years of age, and unable to obtain her there and then in marriage. Pizzulli abducted the child, for which offence he was condemned to 16 years' incarceration. Prosecution for offence of this nature in Italy is reserved to private action, but through revenge and an old enmity between the families concerned, the girl's parents persistently turned a deaf ear to Pizzulli's abiding desire to wed Maria, and had not her own constant attachment for her imprisoned lover at length softened the hearts of her kinsfolk and acquaintances, Pizzulli would have had to remain in prison till October, [illegible].

Recently, however, convict No. 1283 was taken in prison garb to an improvised chapel, where he found Maria, now 18 years old. Amidst a scene of intense emotion the marriage contract was signed and sealed in the presence of a large gathering of relatives on either side, all of whom seemed glad to forget old scores. In accordance with a provision of the Italian penal code, the convict bridegroom, having repaired his fault with the full consent of the offended families, was straightway provided for civilian dress, escorted to the prison gates, and set at liberty, his old warden congratulating him on the way, and cheering his departure.

"Billy the Tapper"

There died recently in Highgate Infirmary, William Hill, who for forty years had earned a living by calling workers early in the morning. His rounds were chiefly in the Highgate district, where, with a long, jointed cane he would tap on the windows of his clients. He was known as "Billy the Tapper."

Rev. Dr. Milligan Thinks Our Climate Severities Are Blessing in Disguise

Rev. Dr. Milligan, one of the best known Presbyterian ministers of Toronto is of opinion that Canada is not at a disadvantage in respect of climate as compared with New Zealand and Australia. After a three months' sojourn in New Zealand, he came to the conclusion that our climatic severities are a blessing in disguise. Native-born New Zealanders do not show the same sturdy old age as their forefathers did who came from sterner climes.

"Everyone has heard of New Zealand as God's own country,'" says Dr. Milligan. "He seems to be an absentee there, especially on Sunday. At a small place not far from Auckland, at a race meet, it was reported that $250,000 passed through the totalisator in one day."

Dr. Milligan has forebodings of trouble in the labor world of New Zealand. The trade combines are the shadow of a great rock in a weary land for loafers, he says. When the Socialistic follies have played their part the political condition of boys in New Zealand can be ascertained better than now.

"As to public utilities," said Dr. Milligan, "the railways belong to the Government, but the little I saw of them led me to the decision to travel by steamship. It would be a wise policy if New Zealand could put its railway interests in such hands as manage our big railways."

EDITORIAL NOTES

A Western man has sephrated from his wife because he discovered that she put kerosene in his whisvey. If he had been accustomed to the kind of stuff dispensed in some of the "dry" towns of Ontarjo he would never have noticed the difference.

If a course of manual training is to be introduced in the public schools, the boys ought to be taught how to mend rents in the seat of their trousers and how to sew on shirt buttons. It would save mother a good deal of work.

The militant suffragettes of London, whose bombs invariabl fail to explode, doubtless realize by this time that they made a serious mistake in not securing the services of Ortie McManigal, the expert constructor of infernal machines in the United States.

A number of pulpiteers have declared that the death of Luther McCarty in the prize ring was e brutal murder. More than a score of necks are broken every year in football games but these cases are merely listed as "deplorable accidents" and allowed to go as such.

A Delaware man who had his life insured for $200,000 coughed himself to death the other day. Doubtless the news of his demise was received with regret by the insurance company, because it will have to do some coughing in an upward direction.

The fact that the Balkgn allies are fighting over the spoils of their war with Turkey affords the poRers of Europe a fine opportunity to swipe the aforesaid spoils.

It is announced that both the suffragists and the anti-suffragists are going to stump the old country. This means, of course, that the country is in for a spell of intense suffering.

Some moving pictures were taken at the City Hall of Pittsburg the other day, and a paper of that city says: "Several hundred feet of the Mayor working were secured." From which we infer that the Mayor of Pittsburg outclasses the centipede in the matter of pedal extremities.

In publishing church affairs the changing of a single letter may make a great deal of difference. Recently a Toronto paper published an item sent in by a clergyman which read: "The meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society was hell at our house yesterday afternoon."

John Mann, a veteran of the American civil war who now resides in Toronto, aged 67 years, wants to run a mile foot race on Dominion Day, against a Confederate veteran. Doubtless the old Yank learned to run so well during the war that he is proud of his speed.

A SANE MOVE

Referring to the recent decision of School Inspector Putnam to do away with promotion examinations as far as possible in the Ottawa schools, the Free Press tells us that it is expected that one-half of the pupils in the ontrance classes will be granted certificates without trying the usual examinations. So far as we know Ottawa is the first city to try this plan. We congratulate Inspector Putnam upon his courage, and we trust the results will abundantly vindicate what looks like a very wise and sane policy.

AN INTERESTING SUGGESTION.

For the inauguration of the Peace Centennial of 1914 Senator Elihu Root suggests five minutes of absolute silence throughout the entire Anglo-Saxon world. Just think what that would mean. Mills would stop rumbling; trains would stop running; palitical orators would stop spieling; babies would stop squalling; baseball fans would stop rooting; bums would stop bumming; gamblers would stop gambling; and the Era Club would stop scolding itself or somebody else.

And these simultaneous five minutes will come, if they are to be really simultaneous, in the United States, in Great Britain and its English-speaking dependencies, after somebody has figured it out. A pleasant suggestion is Senator Root's for it is difficult to imagine anything more heavenly than five absolutely noiseless minutes but there will be considerable regret that it cannot be done.

TO KEEP CHILDREN OFF THE STREETS

At the recent session of the Ontario Legislature a law was enacted dealing with the matter of children on the streets and in public places after dark. The neU law provides that no child under sixteen "shall loiter in any public place after nine o'clock in the evening, or be there, unless accompanied by his parent or guardian, or by some duly appointed adult. 6If the child is found in such a place after the hour named he may be warned, and if the warning is disregarded he may be taken by a policeman or officer of the Children's Aid Society either to his home or to the Children's Shelter. For the first offence the parent who permitted his child so to loiter shall incur a penalty of $1, and $2 for subsequent offences. By public place is meant any street, highYay or lane, and any tavern or other place of public resort, and, generally, any place to which the public have access. This law, if enforced, should help to remove a fruitful source of evil to child life.

Your Bad Taste The Morning Is Due To Catarrh

Destroy This Poisonous Microbe Before Your Health is Seriously Injured.

Perhaps you haven't thought of calling those unpleasant symptoms that affected your nose and throat by any particular name—but it's Catarrh just the same.

When the attack is severe, your eyes are watery and look weak. Your breath is offensive, due to inflammation in the nose and throat.

At last science has discovered a real remedy, a new scientific marvel which acts like no other Catarrh remedy on earth. "Catarrhozone" operates on a new plan; it is a direct remedy, goes instantly to the source of the trouble. Its rich, fragrant essences and healing balsams are breathed in vapor form through a special inhaler and give instant relief.

Catarrhozone doesn't stop at the relief stage—it goes further—keeps on going till a cure is affected. Bad cases are cured, as you can judge from the following letter:—"Every morning for six months last winter I awoke with a bad taste, an awful breath and stuffed up feeling in my nostrils," writes Rob E. Rutland, of Regina. "It was simply an awful case of chronic Catarrh. Relief first came from Catarrhozone. I used that inhaler twenty times a day and took it to bed with me at night. I am cured, and by the use of Catarrhozone stay well. Now I am free from irritable throat trouble, coughs, colds, headache, or catarrh."

No medicine on earth is so certain to cure every form of Catarrh or throat trouble as "Catarrhozone." Get the large $1.00 size, lasts two months and is guaranteed; medium size, 50c.; sample size 25c. All storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

DO ANGELS WEAR WINGS?

New York Lady Visiting Friends in Peterborough Says They Do Not

If you are one of those old-fashioned persons who expect to flit about on a pair of large white wings when you pass beyond the grace, you are doomed to a heavy disappointment. We aren't going to have any wing over there—the people that made the pictures for the Sunday School quarterlies were well meaning but grossly misguided.

How do we know this? Because we have it from a person who associated daily with spirits that come back to earth on round trip tours from the other world.

She is a leading spiritualist who has been attacked by Rev. J. D. Hagerman. Mr. Hagerman is delivering a course of lectures, exposing the practices of fake mediums. He and our New York visitor have been firing statements at each other, but as yet they have never been got together on the same platform.

SHE ADMITS THERE ARE FAKES

"I admit," said she, "that there are many fake mediums. No one has done more to expose them than I have. But I have nothing to do with them. My work is of an entirely different sort.

"I never give seances and I don't believe that it is possible for anyone to call spirits whenever they wish to see them. Have I seen spirits? Many and many a time."

"How do they look?" asked the tense reporter.

"Well, they are a good deal as they were in their life on earth, only more angelic-looking—and you can see right through one. They are as transparent as the pane of my parlor window there. I believe they are around us all the time, but I can see them only when they want to be seen.

"Of course the lines of an angel are not as clearly cut as those of a tangible person in the flesh and blood. You can see them very clearly."

"How do they dress?"

It seemed that angels and spirits dress in what look like long, flowing, white robes. Whether you are a blond or a brunette, you need's fear about the costume becoming you when you shuck your body and go away from here. No matter how good-looking you were when you walked down Canal street in shoe leather, you are going to be a whole lot better looking when you float down Canal street as a spirit, if you have lived [illegible].

But as to wings:

"Of all the spirits I have seen," she said, "I have never observed one with wings. I'm sure I would have taken notice of it, too, because it would have appealed to me as being so unusual.

"Really, when you come to look at it in the cold, calm light of logic, wings would be merely in your way.

DON'T NEED 'EM, SHE SAYS

"Why should we have to fly about like a mammoth sparrow when space will be as nothing to us? Angels can travel more swiftly than light or thought. While it might look as if a bird goes fast, their flight would be as nothing compared to the speed of a spirit."

CIRCUS HAS SEPARATE SHOW OF BABY ANIMALS

Barnum and Bailey Exhibit Rare Wild Little Creatures In Their Big New Menagerie.

The results of American breeding of wild animals of India and Africa will be seen in Peterborough Monday, June 23, with the Barnum and Bailey Circus.

In the winter quarters of the greatest show on earth, at Bridgeport, Conn., have been born in its menagerie many wild animals during the past year. These specimens will be seen in this year's exhibit in most remarkable profusion. This great circus maintains in its permanent quarters a complete and scientific zoological garden for the propagation and rearing of young wild animals. Many species supposed to be impossible to breed outside their native jungles and haunts have been so successfully produced under the direction of the show's expert curator that the experimental stage has well been passed and the great circus now invites the public to view the results of this new enterprise.

Two of the giraffes in the menagerie are American born. They are the only giraffes in the world native to any other country than Africa. Fifty years ago a giraffe was born in the London Zoo. It did not live and zoologists decided that these animals could only be matured in a certain limited zone of Africa suited to their delicate organism. The Barnum and Bailey circus is proving beyond all doubt,, however, the mistake of this conclusion, and the general opinion so long maintained about the rearing of other wild animals in captivity.

Young lions, panthers, tigers, leopards, kangaroos, camels, bison, curious African and Asiatic creatures of the antelope variety have all been produced in the show's home zoo, and an astonishing display of this colony of young animals will be seen in this year's collection. Not only will the serious student of animal life find pleasure is seeing this duplication of the world's disappearing store of rare animal wonders, but every one will enjoy the sight of these many cute pets of the biggest menagerie in the world. The children are particularly delighted with the specimens of this interesting kindergarten.

PETERBORO CHOSEN AS SHOW'S HEAD QUARTERS

glorious gladness in the city of Peterborough on Saturday, May 9th, 1914.

In the train and camps of Fleming Bros. Hippodrome Wild West and Indian Congress will be found the most celebrated living pioneers, scouts, guides, Indians, and caucasian vanquerous types of Mexican beauties, lovely western girls, cowboys, rangemen, marksmen, Russian Cossacks, gouchos, Arabs, Japanese Hindus, artillerymen, and roughriders of the world.

Nothing will be spared in a financial way in making this America's most complete Wild West Show. One has only to mention Atpit, who belongs to this historical Wild West, to recall his record. Among this aggregation we find the squaws and pappooses, of his and other tribes living in Fleming Bros. Wild West show under the same jurisdiction, practising the same customs and living as nearly as possible on their own reservations, with the exceptions, to wit—their food is better, their comforts are watched over by a man who does not neglect anything, and who has taken them as a trust from the Great White Father or Atpit, as he is called by the Indians themselves. The Indians with this show are genuine celebreties well known through their deeds and complaints to Congress from time to time.

The Hippodrome Wild West and Indian Congress will tour exclusively through the Canadian Points, placing before the public the most historical Wild West aggregation; bringing before the public also, at the present time the life mode and ways of the Indians, roughriders, and cowboys of the Wild West in the early days. This cannot be obtained adequately in any other way than seeing them in real life. Books written upon the subject are very eronoous in as much as they do not place the life and habits of our forefathers in the minds of our readers, as the seeing of them really does. The action steps ways of walking and other traits of character can only be tion, which in all will be backed by seeing them as they walk, talk and move. Their language cannot be explained by the human tongue, because it is comglomeration of moans, yells and gestures.

Every imaginable living aspect of Hippodrome Wild West and Indian Congress life, will be portrayed and presented by this mammoth aggregation, which in all will qe backed by brains, energy and unlimited capital. It will be absolutely the most complete Wild West Show in existence today and the only exclusively Canadian Circus or Wild West show ever organized.

LOADED PISTOL HINT TRAITOR ENDS LIFE

Officers Go to His Home, Destroy Case, Leave Gun—Wait Outside For Shot.

Vienna, June 6.—Disclosures of the fact that Col. Albert Redl, of the general staff of the Eighth Army Corps, committed suicide last Monday rather than face trial on a charge of high treason, is made in the military gazette. He was accused of selling to Russia important military secrets.

It is the custom in the Austrian army to give officers who are accused of a disgraceful crime the opportunity of taking their own lives. In accordance with this four officers went to his home, and destroyed his case, leaving behind on his table a loaded revolver. They waited outside and a few minutes later heard that the disgraced colonel had used the weapon as they intended

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY

Inauguration of Grand Trunk Lake and Rail Route Service between Eastern and Western Canada

Commencing Saturday, June 7th, West-bound, and on each Monday, Wednesday and Saturday thereafter, the Grand Trunk Railway will operate a special "Steamship Express," leaving Toronto 10.RT a.m., stopping at Hamilton, Brantford, Paris, Woodstock, Ingersoll, London and Strathroy, arriving Sarnia Wharf 4.00 p.m., making direct connection with the Northern Navigation Company's palatial steamers leaving Sarnia Wharf 4.15 p.m. for Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Port Arthur and Fort William.

Steamer leaving Sarnia Wharf Monday does not call at Port Arthur.

On the arrival of the steamer at Fort William, special trains of the highest standard will leave that point at 4.45 p.m., arriving Winnipeg 7.45 a.m., next morning.

The service afforded by the route is the finest in every respect and includes Parlor and Parlor-Cafe service between Toronto and Sarnia Wharf, excellent service on the boats of the Northern Navigation Company, including the "Hamonic," the finest and fastest passenger boat on the Great Lakes. Standard Sleeping cars (Electric Lights in Lower and Upper Berths), Colonist Sleeping Cars (Berths Free), Dining Car and Coaches on the Grand Trunk Pacific between Fort William and Winnipeg. Through Sleeping Cars between Fort William and Edmonton, commencing June 14th.

A special train will run the reverse way—from Sarnia Wharf to Toronto, commencing Sunday, June 8th, and each Tuesday Friday and Sunday thereafter. The first Eastbound train having direct steamer connection leaves Sarnia on Friday, June 13th

Full particulars, reservations on steamer or train may be obtained on application to Grand Trunk Agents, or write C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto, Ont.

BASEBALL.

Chicago, June 6.—The Evening Post today prints an interview with an unnamed man "closely identified with American League affairs" in which the statement is made that the Detroit and Chicago clubs are arranging a trade involving Ty Cobb and Hal Chase. Confirmation of the report was lacking here and in Detroit. Nevertheless, the Post's informant asserts that the story is not as absurd as it may appear on the other players of Cobb's "holding" out at the beginning of the season and the large salary demanded by the famous Georgian, furnish three very good reasons for the Detroit club being willing to part with its star player. The Chicago club got Chase from New York yesterday by exchanging First Baseman Borton and Utility Infielder Zeider for him.

Cleveland, June 6.—One hundred thousand dollars in cash is the bonus that Cleveland business men are reported to have offered the Naps if they can bring the pennant of the American League to this city.

The fact has not been advertised in Cleveland and will not be until all of the money has been subscribed. But the Cleveland ball players have been told that there is every reason to believe that the full amount will be donated. One of the players told Manager Callahan, of the White Sox, that the winning of the pennant by the Naps would mean the enrichment of every man on the team by $4000. They figure 25 men in on the division should the plan go through and the Naps should win.

This would be the largest purse ever split by a baseball club, and that regardless of whether the Naps were victorious in the world's championship series or not.

Incidentally this may reveal another reason why those Cleveland players are battling so hard for every game. Winning a pennant is a whole lot. It means a part of the world's series money, but add $100,000 to the sum to be won in the big series and you have a purse that almost any fellow would strive with might and main to win.

St. Louis, June 6.—Frederick C. Whittemore, Jr., a freshman in Yale University, died here today from an injury to the spine which resulted from being hit by a baseball several years ago.

Young Whittemore came home from Yale three months ago suffering from the injury, which gradually had developed to a dangerous stage. He was 20 years old.

Kearny, N. J., June 6. — William Wiggins, 22 years old, hit on the head by a pitched ball during a game of baseball Friday, died today of a fractured skull. He did not recover consciousness after he was struck.

RING.

New York amateur boxers are planning to form a co-operative organization to insure themselves against accidents in the ring. If the New York pures are as negligent and careless in flinging their hands about as some of the boys of this vicinity have been in the past, there will be more boxers drawing pay for injuries than the organization can afford to stand for.

Sammy Robideau, the holder of the United States navy lightweight title since his enlistment ran out, has been performing in a creditable manner. Robideau is one of Jack McGuigan's stable of boxers. Gilbert Gallant holds a win over him.

Gus Platts, known as the Sheffield Blade, who hails from England, said that England has developed in a long to be one of the best welterweights that England has developed in a long time, is in this country looking for a match with Mike Gibbons. Jem Driscoll advised Platts to come to America. Driscoll claims that the "Blade" can and will defeat any welterweight in this country.

The show scheduled for Gloucester last night was postponed to next Monday night, why Cy Goodman and Joe Eagan will meet in one 10-round bout of an all-star series.

BERLIN GETS GODLESS AVOIDING CHURCH TAXES

Government Adds 20 per Cent to Income Tax if You Are Protestant, to Support State Church.

Berlin, June 6.—Berlin is becoming a "Godless capital." It costs money here to be religious or even to admit that you have any "faith." The government adds 20 per cent. to your income tax for your chances in the hereafter if you call yourself a Protestant. The number of "irreligious" or "unreligious" in Berlin, has doubled in the last 12 months according to the tax figures published today. There are now about 120-000 against 60,000 a year ago. Thousands apparently would rather take their own chances of getting to heaven than to pay for the help of the state church.

A "ham sandwich" has blocked legislation in the parliament of Alsace-Lorraine. It is probably the first time in history that a thin slice of ham between two slices of bred called here a "Broetchen," has been the cause of political strife. Herr Assemblyman Brogly of the Catholic Centrist party caused the trouble within his own party by charging that a teacher in a Catholic public school ate a "Broetchen" or "ham sandwich" right before the eyes of his pupils on Friday. Her Hausseman, leader of the party, declared that such things could not be tolerated.

Herr Emmel, a Socialist assemblyman, then started a "ruction" by declaring that he saw Hausseman eat a ham sandwich during a legislative junket to visit a sugar factory. Hausseman denied this in anything but temperate language. Inquiry showed that the teacher had eaten a "smoked eel" sandwick, and the legislative wheels started to move again.

SILVER-BLACK FOXES ARTIFICIALLY REARED

In this issue appears a most interesting and instructive article concerning the breeding of silver-black foxes. The active mind of man has never evolved a surer and safer path to weath than that of the silver-black fox route.. Now that seal and sea-other skins are rendered almost impossible of attainment except by those of great wealth, these foxes, even more valuable are being bred articficially to supply the demands of Russian millionaires. British Columbia Black Foxes, Ltd., are offering shares at $50 each, for commond stock. This proposition is well worth serious consideration by those seeking a safe and lucrative investment

A HABIT TO CULTIVATE

Devote Much Time to Mental and Physical Exertion

Discontent and disease of mind and body are frequently due to an aimless, half-filled life! The reason for this is very much more rational and natural than might at first be supposed. The proper state of mind is activity. The proper state of the muscles is activity. A mind with much leisure easily becomes dissatisfied. A body not properly exercised loses its full powers, becomes flabby and susceptible to disease germs. So the best policy of the individual who would live long and well is to practice the habit of "busyness." If you haven't regular work to do make some duty yours to perform. And this should be a daily mental duty, as well as a merely physical one. The individual who is not systematically busy a share of every day soon finds time to cultivate an ache or pain; to let the sunshine of life slip by unnoticed and to make mountains out of mole-hills of trouble. This condition gets the body and the mind into a non-resistant state and paves the way for disease to take possession. Cultivate the "busyness" habit. It can be nurtured and perfected just as the laziness habit grows.

WHERE THE CATS GO

Skins Are Sold in London Market Extensively.

The fur of the domestic cat is much bought on the London market; into what it turns after manipulation probably is a trade secret. According to a report furnished by J. M. Mussen, trade commissioner at Leeds, to the weekly report of the department of trade and commerce, no fewer than 120,452 cat skins were purchased in one year. Many of these skins came from North America. In point of number musquash skins led, over five million of them being bought. Only 1,223 silver fox skins were sold, the supply being stationary. The number of beaver skins sold was neary 61,-000. Prices were high this year, and Mr Mussen notes that three was a strong demand for skunk, the price of which advanced 20 per cent.; wolverine skins doubled in value.

Canada Sees Millions in Fox Farming

WORTH HIS WEIGHT IN GOLD.—Note the silver tip of the tail. The world record price for a silver-black fox skin is $3,000; live silver-black foxes have sold at $30,000 a pair.

(Technical World Magazine for May.)

At the present price of silver-black fox skins a man possessing a source of supply would become a millionaire in a few years. Here, therefore, is a real legitimate "Wallingford" enterprise which opens a field of industry that seems destined to become one of the best paying businesses on the North American continent. The scheme is nothing more nor less than the raising of silver-black foxes, and it has reached the stage where it may be regarded as an addition to the already long list of occupations.

The scene of this new gamble is now Eastern Canadian and British Columbia, and it beats the mining game for excitement. Fox raising has become a craze, men of wealth are heavily concerned in it, and the little fellows are trailing along hoping for some of the crumbs.

The province of Prince Edward Island, which has long had the name of the "Garden of the Gulf," and has been famous for its oats, has been turned practically into one vast fox ranch. and land in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec is being requisitioned for the new venture. The final object of it all, of course, is to market the pelts, but no one has dared to kill a fox for market in the last two years. The world record price for a silver fox skin is $3000, whereas the last recorded price for live silver foxes was $30,000 a pair.

Aside from the beauty of the silver-black fox fur, its rarity has helped to keep the price up.

A perfect skin has a foundation of jet black, with a sprinkling of hairs on the back and rumps which are silver grey for a portion of the distance between the root and the tip of the hair. The extremity of the tail is always pure white. The brilliancy and sheen of a fine pelt give it a notable richness. In fact, it has been estimated by furriers that if black fox skins were as plentiful as those of the red fox, they would still command from $21 to $100, while red fox skins are quoted in current commercial price lists at $5 to $8 for ordinary specimens, and from $12 to $15 for those if Prince Edward Island. The cost of enough raw skins to make a fur coat may be guessed, when it is stated that the average weight of a healthy animal is only eleven or twelve pounds.

The start of the new industry began in this way: About twenty-five years ago Charles Dalton of Tignish, Prince Edward Island, secured a pair of silver-black foxes that had been captured on the Island and tried to breed them in floored building, but he was not very successful. He gave one of his whelps to Robert Oulton, of Albertan, Prince Edward Island, who began to raise them out of doors in pens about seventy-five feet square. This proved to be the proper method and soon the two men were making a fortune out of the business. The neighbors noticed that Dalton and Oulton were becoming rich, but for a long time they kept the secret of their success in raising foxes, and allowed no one to go near the pens. Their secret could not be concealed always and after a time others began to start fox ranches.

As the science of breeding became established, the tremendous possibilities of fox ranching appealed to the speculative tendencies of the "Islanders," and the industry advanced at a great pace. The island supply of wild foxes was soon exhausted, and the word was passed through the Northern woods that a silver-black fox trapped alive was worth many trapped dead.

At present nearly 1000 foxes are kept in pens on the farms of the island. At least 600 of them are of the genuine silver-black variety. They are not to be slaughtered and the pelts sent to London, which is the great clearing house of the fur trade. They are to be nurtured carefully, awaiting a market from men eager to get into the new game. Dead, their pelts would bring close to $1,000,000. Their value as breeders at the present way things are going is more than $4,000,000.

The silver-black fox in captivity has had the approval of royalty. The Governor-General, the Duke of Connaught, and his daughter, the Princess Patricia, in their tour of Canada last summer, made special visits to ranches owned by Dr. Alexander MacNeill at Summerside, Prince Edward Island. One of Dr. MacNeill's new ranches was formally named St. Patrick by the Princess. Describing his part in the industry, Mr. MacNeill said:

"Three years ago, with two partners, Allen and Saunders, I started to raise silver-black foxes. We bought one pair of young silver-blacks for $4000, but they didn't breed that year. The following year we bought five and a half pairs at from $4000 to $8000 a pair. We raised fifteen young foxes that year and sold them all the way from $7000 to $10,000 a pair. There are from two to eight whelps in a litter, but rarely more than seven.

"We have now in St. Patrick's Ranch fourteen pairs of silver-black foxes. These are of the highest value as breeders. It is really difficult to say just what they are worth. We have two or three pairs that we would not part with for any amount of money, and they are certainly worth at least $30,000 a pair. We would not kill any foxes for their fur while there is such a demand for breeding purposes, and the demand is rapidly increasing in different parts of the world, especially in Russia. We expect that the demand will continue to increase for several years."

Another big ranch in Prince Edward Island is Park Farm Ranch, which has been financed by men whose previous experience [illegible] centred in department stores. This ranch now hold about $200,000 worth of silver-black foxes.

The ranch consists of five acres of grove on a hillside overlooking the harbor. A bewildering maze of special fox netting divides the grove into thirty runs or warrens. In the centre of each warren is the breeding kennel, which is constructed on scientific lines that experience has taught is the most advantageous. Provision is made to keep the dog foxes, or males, in separate enclosures at times when their presence would be too disturbing to the growing young.

Nothing that will prevent mishap to the baby foxes has been overlooked in building these kennels. Then entrance is by a covered runway from the ground. The interior is divided into two compartments. The outer compartment is the mother fox's sitting room, and the inner her bedroom. The bedroom has a sloping interior roof and a round, high entrance. Inside, the bottom is rounded, like a bowl, with sufficient depth to keep the little foxes from falling out before their eyes are open. The bedroom, usually called the nest, is interlined with pulverized cork to keep out dampness, and is surrounded by air chambers for ventilation.

There is a certain amount of ingenuity in keeping the wily fox safely within an inclosure. The warren inclosures are made by a specially prepared heavy netting and for some distance above the ground and down to the subsoil there is a closer barricade. In building the inclosures, trenches about five feet deep are dug, planks are placed on edge or cement set in, the wire is built perpendicularly from this base, and the surface earth packed in again. When Mr. Fox starts on his burrowing, he goes down as far as the hardpan and finds the resistance of wire all the way along the bounds of his inclosure. He soon discovers that there is no underground way out and thereafter confines his subsurface wandering to the centre of the inclosure.

If a fox should escape from his warren, say at feeding time, when the keeper may carelessly leave the gate open, he will encounter a wire barricade that surrounds the entire ranch, and although this is not carefully constructed as the individual inclosures, it serves to keep the fox busy until his absence is discovered and he is recaptured.

Men all over Canada are figuring on fox profits. Those who haven't foxes figure what would happen if they could only find the price of a pair. Just suppose one did have a pair! In one year, with luck, they they would produce a litter of from three to seven. The second year, by crossbreeding and exchange with other breeders this number would be increased to about twelve. The third year would show thirty-six in his pens and if luck kept up there would be 110 at the end of the fourth year. Five years breeding and exchange might bring the number up to 330 and six to nearly 1000. Then he would be worth more than $7,000,000 if the present prices were maintained and the quality of the foxes was of the highest.

Foxes breed but once a year and are generally believed to be monogamous. They mate the first season when less than a year old, and may continue to breed until they are ten years old. The care which breeders take to keep the foxes free from outside disturbances in the mating period is the result of costly experience. Once the young have their eyes open, which is from nineteen days to a month after birth, there is not much danger.

The wise fox farmer arranges to leave the foxes very much alone at whelping time. A plentiful supply of food has been put in the pen in advance and he sees to it that no prying persons get within sound. For weeks he is in a state of exquisite expectancy. He may only guess how many foxes, which he may sell later for $10,000 to $30,000 a pair, are in the new litter. When the pups are from four to six weeks old they begin to come out and play, and from a safe post of observation he may attempt to count them and appraise their merits. But he will not succeed very well, for not all of them come out at once. They keep running in and out, with the father constantly on guard, ready to let loose sharp yelps of warning if danger threatens.

After two months the farmer may take the pups from the mother or leave them for the full six months which they will nurse if left alone. The little foxes are easy to wean, taking to bread and milk with all the avidity of a human baby.

TENDERS FOR DREDGING

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Dredging, Fort Arthur, Ontario," will be received until 4.00 P.M., on Friday, June 13, 1913, for dredging required at Port Arthur, Ont.

Tenders will not be considered unless made on the forms supplied, and signed with the actual signatures of the tenderers.

Combined specification and form of tender can be obtained on application to the Secretary, Department of Public Works, Ottawa. Tenders must include the towing of the plant to and from the work. Dredges and tugs not owned and registered in Canada shall not be employed in the performance of the work contracted for. Contractors must be ready to begin work within thirty days after the date they have been notified of the acceptance of their tender.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, for five per cent (5 p.c.) of the contract price, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,
R. C. DESROCHERS,
Secretary.

SYNOPSIS OF DOMINION LAND REGULATIONS

ANY person who is sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. The applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-agency for the district. Entry by proxy may be made at any agency, on certain conditions by father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister of intending homesteader.

Duties.—Six months' residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, solely owned and occupied by him or by his father, mother, son, daughter, brother, or sister.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties.—Must reside upon the homestead or pre-emption six months in each of six years from date of homestead entry (including the time required to earn homestead patent) and cultivate fifty acres extra.

A homesteader who has exhausted his homestead right and cannot obtain a pre-emption may enter for a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties.—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate fifty acres and erect a house worth $300.00.

Section No. 1.
NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned and marked "Tender for Section No. 1, Welland Ship Canal," will be received at this office until 16 o'clock on Thursday, July 17th, 1913.

Plans, Specifications and form of contract to be entered into can be seen on or after June 4th, at the office of the Chief Engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, and at the office of the Engineer in Charge, St. Catharines, Ontario.

Copies of plans, and specifications may be obtained from the Department on the payment of the sum of fifty dollars. To bona fide tenderers this amount will be refunded upon the return of the above in good condition.

Parties tendering will be required to accept the fair wages schedule prepared or to be prepared by the Department of Labour, which schedule will form part of the contract.

Contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms, and in the case of firms, unless there are attached the actual signature, the nature of the occupation, and place of residence of each member of the firm.

An accepted bank cheque for the sum of $200,000.00 made payable to the order of the Minister of Railways and Canals, must accompany each tender, which sum will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the work, at the rates stated in the offer submitted.

The cheque thus sent in will be returned to the respective contractors whose tenders are not accepted.

The cheque of the successful tenderer will be held as security, or part security, for the due fulfilment of the contract to be entered into.

The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

Prominent Canadians Think the Year Should Have Thirteen Months

The Royal Society of Canada wants the calendar revised. A delegation waited upon Premier Borden and urged that he exercise his authority in Canada and exert his influence with the British Government to have the number of months in the year increased from twelve to thirteen, and that each month shall consist of twenty-eight days. This, it is urged would make them all the same, and would also result in each day of the week coming every year on the same day of the month.

Premier Borden promised the delegation that their request would receive the serious attention of his Government. The deputation consisted of Sir Sanford Fleming, Sir James Grant, Mr. Benjamin Sulte, Mr. R. O. Boucher and Mr. W. D. Lesueur.

FOR NINETY YEARS

Registrarship at Barrie in the Lount Family That Long

Samuel Lount, Registrar of Deeds for Simcoe County, who died recently, came from a family that figured largely in the history of that part of Ontario since the year 1811, when the late Gabriel Lount, grandfather of the deceased, settled just south of Holland Landing. Samuel Lount, the eldest son and uncle of the late Mr. Lount did not become a regular land surveyor like his father and younger brother, George, but was an expert woodsman, ranger and explorer of the great northern forests, and as such assisted his brother with the surveys of much of the southern portion of the County of Simcoe. In the course of time the elder Samuel Lount became one of the best known men of the country, ultimately, in 1834, being elected one of the members of the Upper Canada Legislature for Simcoe County. The part he bore in the rebellion of '37 and his subsequent execution is familiar to all readers of the history of that period. George Lount, father of the dead Registrar, was born in 1799, and he qualified as a land surveyor. When Simcoe County was erected into a separate district in 1826 George Lount became its first registrar. He was the first postmaster at Holland Landing and conducted a general trading store. In 1864 he removed to Barrie, which had been made the county town, and held the position of Registrar of Deeds until the year 1872, a period of almost half a century, when he resigned, and was immediately succeeded by his son, Mr. Samuel Lount. Thus it will be seen that the position has been held by the Lount family (father and son) for upwards of years.

A BABY SAMSON

Sheffield Child Not Yet Five Years Old Strong as a Man

In every sense of the term the four and a half year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Chester, of Sheffield, England, is somewhat of a handful to his proud parents. Master Chester is accustomed to take his exercise with 56 pound weights and the bending of nails. Before he was two and a half years old he astonished his mother by toying with a 28 pound weight. When a babe of two years old he gave her a caress that made her "see stars," and dislodged a tooth. The doctors are, of course, interested in him, and after a searching examination—aided by X-ray apparatus—they pronounced him to be a thoroughly normal child, though probably the largest of his age in England.

Four feet in height, and weighing 112 pounds, he measures nearly forty inches round the chest, with proportionate sturdy limbs and remarkable muscular development. Naturally something more than normal diet is needed to sustain this energetic and steadily-growing youngster. Save for a daily bowl or two of soup, he is practically a vegetarian, though very partial to fish. Milk, eggs, and bananas, however, seem to be his mainstay. Of milk, his daily consumption averages about three quarts, quite apart from a jar of cream, which he prefers slightly soured. Six or eight eggs, and a dozen and a half bananas, and, of course, plenty of bread and butter, complete his daily dietary.

Like Ontario's System

Two State Commissions, from California and Maryland respectively, looked into Ontario's system of handling prison reform methods as exemplified by the prison farm at Guelph and their verdict was:

"Ontario has spoken the last word in prison reformatory methods, at least so far as we have yet met, and we have been on the work for some time. The working of the institution and the results attained are a revelation." Both the above named states contemplate the reorganization of prison methods along the lines of Ontario's system.

ANIMALS IN BUNCHES

Each Species Formerly Had a Distinguishing Name For a Group

Much of the language used in various sports is our inheritance from the Middle Ages. Different kinds of beasts when in companies were distinguished by their own particular epithet, which was supposed to be in some manner descriptive of the habits of the animals. To use the wrong term of these words subjected the would-be sportsman to ridicule.

Many of the terms have passed away, but some of them are still retained. This list from the Middle Ages is still good usuage to-day. A "pride" of lions; a "lepe" of leopards; a "herd" of harts and of all sorts of deer; a "bevy" of roes; a "sloth" of bears; a "singular" of boars; a "sounder" of wild swine; a "route" of wolves; a "harras" of horses; a "ray" of colts; a "stud" of mares; a "pace" of asses; a "barren" of mules; a "team" of oxen; a "drove" of kine; a "flock" of sheep; a "tribe" of goats; a "skulk" of foxes; a "down" of hares; a "nest" of rabbits; a "clowder" of cats; a "schrewdness" of apes and a "labor" of moles.

Also, of animals when they retired to rest, a hart was said to be "harbored," a rabbit "set." Two greyhounds were called a "brace," but two barriers were called a "couple." There was also a "mute" of hounds for a number, a "kennel" of raches, a "litter" of whelps and a "cowardice" of curs.

This kind of descriptive phraseology was not confined to birds and beasts, but was extended to the human species and their various propensities natures and callings.

HOT BREAKFAST MEANS MUCH

Success or Failure of the Day Depends to a Large Extent on First Meal.

When a singularly successful business man was asked the secret of getting on in the world, he modestly said his wife deserved most of the credit, as she always had a good breakfast ready for him every day in the year, served punctually and piping hot. He further said that poor food, especially in the morning, was responsible for many business failures, for the man who sets out on a cold morning with cold, indifferent food in his stomach is ill-prepared for the business battle. It takes time and planning, but it pays to serve good breakfasts. It means getting up early enough to insure against rushing about and fretting when things go wrong, but the wise woman counts it no sacrifice to send her husband off cheery and well fed. There are plenty of ways in which a woman without help may manage, and even if she keeps a maid she will find plenty to oversee and correct day after day. The women who rise early to get breakfast for their husbands unite in saying there are possibilities in the early morning hours realised later in the day. When other women are sleepily getting up, the thrifty housekeepers have their morning work done and are ready to get the children off to school. There would be fewer failures in school work if all children were sent to the school room well fed in the morning. If they were aroused in time to dress leisurely and eat a hearty breakfast there would be fewer cases of nervous prostration among teachers. A cup of hot cocoa, a poached egg, good toast and well-cooked cereal served to the entire family in the morning and eaten in a leisurely manner would rob hospitals of many patients and give doctors and surgeons extra vacations every year.

ASSISTING THE TOILERS

The Commendable Work of a Large Number of College Men

Since the inception of the Reading Camp Association work eleven years ago, 250 college men have donned the rough dress of the frontiersman and engaged in every kind of manual labor in order to share with him the benefits of education. One of the qualifications for a reading camp instructor is ability to do any kind of manual work, from building a dump on railway construction to breaking a jam of logs. This is an effort on the part of University men to mix things up a bit and share their blessings with the toilers in lumbering, mining, fishing and railway construction camps. It has the support of not a few employers of labor and many Canadian people, including H. R.H. the Duke of Connaught, Sir Edmund Osler and Sir William Whyte. It has also the co-operation of five Provincial Governments. Almost from its inception the Presbyterian and Methodist Home Mission Committees have contributed to it. This is the first time that funds collected for denominational purposes were spent in undenominational work. In the early days Queen's and McGill provided traveling libraries to be used in the association reading rooms. Recently the students of the Presbyterian College, Montreal, contributed $100 to the work. Not only are students interested but some of the younger professors take an active interest in the work. Prof. Edwards, dean of the faculty of applied science, University of Alberta, voluntarily offered to pay periodical visits to the association's night schools on the G. T.P. in the Yellowhead Pass and carry in fresh literature. Ralph Connor has contributed $54 to furnish Prof Edwards with a horse.

Warming a Joint

The best way to warm up a joint is to wrap it in thickly greased paper and keep it covered while in the oven. By having it covered the steam will prevent the heat from becoming hard and dry.

Steam Removes a Splinter

When a splinter has been driven deep into the hand it can be extracted without pain by steam. Nearly fill a wide-mouthed bottle with hot water. Place the injured hand over the mouth of the bottle and press it tightly. The suction will draw the flesh down and in a few minutes the steam will draw the splinter out.

Stops Curdling

If milk be on the turn, a small pinch of carbonate of soda put into it before boiling often stops it from curdling.

Dear Sirs,—

It is just one year ago that we put in the first stock of SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES CURE, and we wish to state that we have been amazed at the remarkable sale of these remedies. We have had many repeat orders in both our stores and have sold retail $1000.00 worth of these remedies. In spite of all these sales we have yet to hear of one dissatisfied customer, while many have come back to tell us of the wonderful cures resulting from the Medicine.

Another striking feature of this business is that so many customers come in stating that SANOL has cured Mr.—— their intimate friend, and they wished to try it for themselves.

PRECIOUS ASHES

Radium Burned in Grate by Accident and Mixed With Cinders

A firm of Birmingham chemists undertook a delicate task—that of recovering from some ashes about $500 worth of radium. This substance is frequently used for the treatment of skin diseases by private practitioners, who hire the precious mineral. It is contained in what is known as an applicator.

A doctor having removed from a patient's body the applicator and surgical dressings, inadvertently threw them both on to the bedroom fire. The doctor, much distressed, hastened to direct that possession should be taken of all the ashes from the fireplace, and this was done at once. The cinders, contained in a cardboard box, weighed about two pounds and it was found by scientific investigation that they were radio-active. The method of recovering the radium is very slow as all the ashes have to be reduced to powder by slow ignition in oxygen, but eventually it is hoped to regain about half of the precious stuff.

PROLIFIC BUFFALOES

The Herd at Wainwright Increasing Rapidly Amid Ideal Surroundings

Buffalo Park, Wainwright, Alta., which has earned for itself the distinctive title of "home of the mighty buffalo," is situated 666 miles west of Winnipeg and 127 miles east of Edmonton. The park consists of 123,680 acres of wild land with a number of small lakes and shaded forests. It is enclosed with a nine foot wire fence, which is considered buffalo-proof. Seventy-four miles of fencing was necessary to enclose the area set aside. The park is owned and maintained by the Canadian Government. The original Pablo herd purchased by the government in 1907 numbered 706 head, since which time it has increased by 497 head, making a total of 1,200 buffalo which roam contentedly over their original haunts undisturbed as of yore by the white hunter. Many tourists from all parts of the world visit Wainwright and are well repaid for the time spent at the Park taking snapshots of the buffalo and their surroundings.

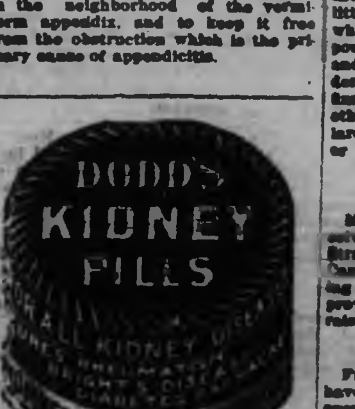
TO ESCAPE APPENDICITIS

An Exercise Commended by a Well Known Physician

A simple way to prevent appendicitis was recently described by a well-known physician. Every night and morning, he advised, go on your knees, bend backward until you sit on your heels, and, at the same time, bend the upper part of your body forward as far as possible. Do this six to ten times.

You may vary the exercise by standing with heels together and toes pointing straight forward, and then stooping into a sitting posture until the knees touch the chest. Do this also six or eight times slowly.

The effect is to stir up the intestine in the neighborhood of the vermiform appendix, and to keep it free from the obstruction which is the primary cause of appendicitis.



CAKES, CAKES, CAKES, CAKES

Here is a Group of The Latest Recipes For the Best Cakes Produced

Many persons find cakes made entirely of buckwheat objectionable. This can be remedied by making the batter one-third corn meal and two-thirds buckwheat. The cakes are said to be equally as good. Many prefer this mixture rather than the ordinary all buckwheat cake.

Buckwheat Cakes

Two cups of buckwheat and half a cup of corn meal; two cups of warm milk and half a cup of warm water; two tablespoonfuls of molasses, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one even teaspoonful of salt. Mix milk, water and molasses together. Sift meal and flour three times with the baking powder and salt. Make a hole in the centre of the flour, stir in the milk and water quickly and lightly till you have a good batter, not too stiff. Bake.

Griddle Cakes

A soapstone griddle is to be preferred for all hot-cake making if it can be had. Cakes are baked upon it, not fried, making them comparatively wholesome.

Set the griddle at the side of the range to heat slowly at least an hour before it is time to make the cakes. If heated suddenly it may crack.

Clean with dry salt. Wipe with a clean cloth and it is ready to use.

Do not allow grease to touch it.

If an iron griddle must be used grease it with a bit of fat, just enough so the cakes will not stick.

Stale Bread Cakes

This recipe is a wise one in which to use up stale bread crumbs. For an hour soak two cupfuls of bread crumbs in a quart of milk. Into this beat a tablespoonful, each, of molasses and melted butter, a teaspoonful of salt and two or three well beaten eggs. When thoroughly mixed add half a cupful of flour which has been sifted with a half teaspoonful of baking powder. Bake on a soapstone griddle if possible.

Feather Cakes

The best way to make feather griddle cakes is to add to a pint of water and milk a teaspoonful of salt, a half teaspoonful of yeast and flour enough to make a batter. Let stand all night. In the morning add one cupful of thick sour milk, two eggs well beaten, one level tablespoonful of butter, one level teaspoonful of soda and flour enough to make the consistency of pancake batter. Let stand twenty minutes and then bake.

Entire Wheat Cakes

The wheat griddle cake is cooked the same as the sweet milk cakes. The ingredients are one-half cup of entire wheat flour, one cup of flour, three teaspoons of baking powder, one-half teaspoon of salt, three tablespoons of sugar, one egg, one and one-quarter cups of milk, one tablespoonful of melted butter.

Rice Cakes

Rice griddle cakes require two and one-half cups of flour, one half cup of cold cooked rice, one tablespoonful baking powder, one teaspoonful salt, one-quarter of a cup of sugar, one and one-half cups of milk, one egg and two tablespoons of melted butter. Mix and sift dry ingredients. Work in rice with tips of fingers; add egg well beaten, milk and butter. Cook the same as other griddle cakes.

Potato Griddle Cakes

Twelve large potatoes, three heaping tablespoonfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one or two eggs, two teacupfuls of boiling milk. Peel the potatoes, wash and grate into a little cold water (which keeps them white). Then strain off water and pour on boiling milk, stir in eggs, salt and flour mixed with the baking powder. If agreeable flavor with a little fine-chopped onion. Bake like any other pancakes, allowing a little more lard or butter. Serve with stewed or preserved fruit.

Cheque From Strathcona

Mayor Schmalts of Berlin, Ont., received a cheque for $4,000 from Lord Strathcona, High Commissioner of Canada, subscribed toward the building fund of a new Y.M.C.A. building, providing the sum of $40,000 was raised.

Sledding Over Sand

French army officers believe they have solved the problem of traveling over African desert sand, a light sledge, driven by an aerial propeller, making fair speed and climbing grades easily.

THE HOLY GRAAL AND ITS HISTORY

Much Doubt as to the Authenticity of Legends Surrounding Supposed Priceless Cup

An interesting account appeared in a Paris paper of the Holy Graal, which is preserved in the Church of St. Lawrence at Genoa. It is a large green cup, presumably hexagonal which, according to popular belief, was used at the Last Supper, and was requisitioned at the Crucifixion. But it seems to have a history far anterior to that great event, and it is claimed for it that it was a present from the Queen of Sheba to King Solomon.

At all events, it seems to have been in Genoa since 1101, when it was given by a knight who brought it from the Holy Land when he returned from the First Crusade. It formed part of the booty which fell into the hands of the Crusaders at the siege of Caesarea. For a long time up to 1476 it was not allowed to be touched, not even to adorn it with precious stones which the faithful were desirous of offering. This rigour, was not due to piety, but there was a fear among the citizens that should the cup be broken pilgrims would cease to visit Genoa.

The cup was at one time believed to have been cut from an enormous emerald. For a long time the vessel was kept in a steel box, and was taken out only once a year. Then it was lifted by silken cords, and placed by the Archbishop on the High Altar for veneration. After the fifteenth century, according to the chronicles of the day, many fetes were held in honor of the vessel, which attracted thousands of pilgrims, not only from Italy, but from other countries. La Condamine examined the cup, and he declared that it was of glass.

It was brought to Paris by Napoleon, who was persuaded of its intrinsic value. On being submitted to the Institute, La Condamine's view was upheld. But the verdict of the scientists was kept a profound secret. There were several reasons for this. It was thought that if the Genoese learned that it was only glass they would be less anxious to ransom it. By some means the secret ceased to be such, and in 1815 the Genoese got it back at pretty much their own price.

SIR HENRY M. PELLATT

Some Side-Lights on the Career of One of Canada's Big Men

A man who has acheived notable success in Canada's financial circles is Sir Henry M. Pellatt of Toronto. He it was who accomplished the plan of bringing power from Niagara Falls to the city of Toronto for use for street railway purposes, and also for lighting the streets and houses of the citizens, and he became president of the companies formed for that purpose, the Electrical Development Company and the Toronto and Niagara Power Company; he is also president of the Toronto Electric Light Company, and is upon the directorate of a number of important Canadian enterprises, such as the Dominion Steel Corporation, the Toronto Railway Company, the Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Company, the British American Assurance Company, and a number of others.

A native of Toronto, born in 1860, he is the son of Henry Pellatt, who, on crossing the Atlantic from England to Canada, became a resident of Toronto and in due course of time figured prominently in the financial world as the senior partner of the famous stock broking firm of Pellatt & Osler.

Henry Mill Pellatt was educated in Upper Canada College and received his business training under his father's direction, entering the office and becoming thoroughly familiar with the stock brokerage business in principle and detail. Upon the dissolution of the firm of Pellatt & Osler in 1883 he was admitted to a partnership by his father under the firm name of Pellatt & Pellatt.

Sir Henry has been one of the foremost men in Canada to encourage every description of manly, outdoor sports, games and pastimes. He himself is a fine practical sportsman. As a youth he was an expert at many games and forms of athletics and was the American amateur champion runner at a mile, having won that much coveted title in a competition held in New York City against all contestants on the American continent. He is an enthusiastic yachtsman and fisherman, and is also a most ardent supporter of horticulture.

Sir Henry Pellatt is moreover a prominent figure in military circles. In his youth he became a private of the Queen's Own Rifles, the largest volunteer corps in the Dominion, and with this Regiment has since been associated, retiring but recently with the rank of Colonel. He is now Brigadier in Command of the 6th Infantry Brigade. In 1910 his broad outlook showed him a way of promoting his strong Imperialistic ideas, and at his own expense, which must have been very heavy, he took his Regiment, the Queen's Own Rifles, consisting of over 600 men, to England to take part in the manœuvres of the British Army at Aldershot. While there he was sent for by the King to Balmoral Castle in Scotland, and received from him the distinction of Commander of the Victorian Order.

At the Coronation of King George V. Sir Henry and Lady Pellatt were given seats in Westminster Abbey, and Sir Henry received an appointment for special military duty in the grand procession the day following.

Groping for a Genius.

Anybody, from the millionaire down to a cook, can write a good play. This is a fact, and must be true, because all of them, laying aside for the moment their overmastering mode, will tell you so.

This is what the manager of a great theatrical business in New York said the other day.

"It is the hardest thing imaginable to find a good play. Our concern has read a thousand plays a year for the last seven years, a total of seven thousand and out of that number we have not found a single play worth using. Anybody can write a play but mighty few can write it right."—The Popular Magazine.

CANADA EXPORTS HUGE FUR CATCH

The Far North Still Abounds in all Kinds of Valuable Wild Animals

Seven hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars was the value of furs brought to Edmonton from the north country and trans-shipped in one week recently to London, Paris, St. Petersburg, New Nork, and Boston. The Hudson's Bay Co. headed the list, with $375,000 worth of furs, Revillon Brothers had $150,000, the Northern Trading Company $100,000, and independent fur traders make up the balance. The skins were of the highest quality and were in the best of condition.

There were several silver fox skins, each valued at from $1,250 to $1,500, and others ranging in value from $500 to $1,000. The catch of fox furs was larger than in former years. The other skins were marten, mink, beaver, fox, bear, deer of various kinds and muskrat. Most of the furs were from the country north and east of Slave Lake and the Mackenzie River, and from the Peace River district and the northern portion of the Provinces of Alberta and British Columbia.

Indians are the principal hunters at the northerly posts of the trading companies, although a number of white men are engaged in the business. The average catch for an experienced trapper is valued at from $1,500 to $2,000 a season, though at times the hunter earns from two to three times that amount by taking silver foxes, which are not only rare, but also difficult to lure to the baited traps. The Chippewyan Indians, who are the chief hunters for the Hudson's Bay Company, make their largest catches in the Great Slave Lake district, where the country is as wild and unpeopled as Nature left it centuries ago.

SPRUCE IN THE LEAD

But Balsam Fir is Much Used for Pulp—Tremendous Waste

Spruce continues to hold its place as the most important of Canadian pulp woods. According to a bulletin of the Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior, over four fifths of the wood consumed in the pulp industry is of this species. Balsam fir, hemlock and poplar, together, make up twenty per cent. of the total consumption. The Province of Quebec is at the head of the provinces in the pulp industry, consuming 58 per cent. of the total pulpwood cut. Ontario uses nearly one-third, and New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and British columbia together consume approximately one-fifteenth of the total.

Balsam fir is coming more generally into use as a pulpwood. It has been found that up to forty per cent. of this species can be used with spruce to produce good paper.

The mechanical process, from which the bulk of newspaper stock is made, continues to be the main source of pulp supply with 60.4 per cent. of the total Canadian product. The sulphite process consumed nearly one-third, and the remainder (nearly eight per cent.), was manufactured by the soda process. This last is the method by which kraft paper, now coming largely into use, is made.

It is estimated that if the material which goes to waste in the woods and mills of the Dominion were made into pulp the product would be greater in amount than at present made from the regular cut.

A Contended Official.

As Mr. J. H. McClellan, Superintendent of the Trent Canal, in the course of business was passing through Buckhorn locks, a few days ago, he had a chat with Mr. Bob Hull, the efficient lockmaster there. In a joking way, Mr. McClellan said: "Bob, after you die, what kind of a job would you look for in the next world?" Mr. Hull replied: "I would ask for no better job than the kind I have now—lockmaster." It is not known whether Mr. Hull had the River Styx in mind or not.

Smith Day in Court

At the police court yesterday, Henry Smith pleaded guilty to having been drunk and was fined $2 and given a week to cash in. The chief said he wanted Smith put on the black list. Smith has a wife and children. He had been on the black list before. In answer to a catagorical list of questions put by his worship, Smith said he did not want to go on the black list, but innocently answering questions that put him there. Smith is now debarred from legal participation in alcoholic delights.

Given Another Chance.

At yesterday's police court, Henry Meare was charged with being a vagrant and pleaded not guilty. P. C. Meagher said Meare was in the court a few days ago and fined for being drunk. The fine has not yet been paid. "He has seen prisoner walking round the streets since and not working. Meare said he had a wife and two children at Lakefield. He worked at Jones livery barn and made $2. He had sent his wife $2 in the past two weeks. The prisoner offered to take the pledge if let go. The magistrate let him go and said Meare would go to the Central Prison if he ever appeared again. Hector Smith pleaded guilty to having been found drunk and asked to be put on the black-list. He was accommodated. P. C. Meagher gave evidence.

Lord Nelson's Words Recalled.

Last night at 8 o'clock the sewer trap at the corner of Brock and Water streets became plugged with debris washed down by the heavy rain. In a few minutes a miniature lake arose at Dr. Carmichael's corner. An Englishman in the city's employ, evidently remembering the words of Lord Nelson "England expects this day that every man shall do his duty," rushed into, not the deadly, but the watery breach and ploughed, right up to his knees through the turbid waters and cleared away the obstructing mass. This sturdy son of Albion remarked to a Times reporter "This is the second time the bleedin' sewer has been plugged in arf an 'our. I just cleaned it out before going to the corner of Pawk and Chawlotte Streets, and here the bloomin' thing is plugged again.

Made Wonderful Recovery When Dr. Hamilton's Pills Were Used.

"I was never actually sick," writes Mrs. Norman Le Pierre, wife of a well known resident of Lebaniens, "yet I never could get strong like other women. I ate well enough, but somehow rich and red blood I could never make. When I married I took great pride in my housekeeping, but it kept me tired all the time. Mrs. Lechance, my neighbor, looked well — she told me her health had been made up by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I only thought of pills as a physic, but now I know that Dr. Hamilton's Pills are more, for they quickened my stomach, liver and bowels—made me stouter and stronger, gave me such color in my cheeks as I never had before. I sincerely believe Dr. Hamilton's Pills should be used by every woman—that's why I write this letter."

Doctor Said He Had Diabetes

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CLEARED OUT EVERY TRACE OF IT.

That's Why Mr. David Heon, of Nicolet Co., Quebec, Is Recommending the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy To His Neighbors.

St. Wenceslas, Nicolet Co., Que., June 6.—(Special).—"I started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills because the doctor told me I was threatened with diabetes. After taking ten boxes I was again examined by the doctor, and he told me that all trace of diabetes had disappeared."

This is the statement of Mr. David Heon, well-known and highly respected here, and he is only one of the many in this neighborhood who have found a new lease of life, in the great Canadian Kidney remedy.

It is cures such as this that have given Dodd's Kidney Pills their reputation. They are now known from the Atlantic to the Pacific as the remedy that never fails to cure kidney disease, no matter where or in what form it is found.

Dodd's Kidney Pills are no cure-all. They simply cure diseased kidneys. The reason they cure backache, dropsy, rheumatism, neuralgia, diabetes, urinary troubles and Bright's disease is that all of these are either disease of the kidneys or are caused by disordered kidneys failing to do their work.

THE FARMERS' BANK

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., Writes Ottawa Liberal Paper.

The following letter, addressed to the Editor of the Free Press, the organ of the Liberal party at Ottawa speaks for itself:

"Sir.—I regret to see that you say that West Peterborough demands, upon threat of revenge, that the Farmers' Bank depositors be recouped. Let me say that such is not the case. While there were a good many losers in my constituency they did not vote for me. They voted, I am told, in the hope that the late Government would be returned and would repair the damage done by it. They were so assured, I believe, It is not therefore my political interests that I am consulting. I believe that depositors should be recouped. It was the rank and partisan carelessness of the late Government that provoked the disaster, in my opinion.

DOCTOR TELLS HOW TO SHED BAD COMPLEXION

We cannot restore degenerated facial tissue any more than we can restore a lost limb. It is useless to attempt to convert a worn-out complexion into a new one. The rational procedure is to remove the complexion instead—remove the devitalized cuticle. Not by surgical means, however, as the underlying cuticle is too thin, too tender, to withstand immediate exposure. Applying ordinary mercolized wax will gradually absorb the offending cuticle. By degrees, a new, youthful skin appears, a skin soft and delicately tinted as a rose petal.

No lady need hesitate to try this. Procure an ounce of mercolized wax of the druggist. Spread on a thin layer before retiring, removing this in the morning with soap and water. In from one to two weeks the complexion is completely transformed.

An approved treatment for wrinkles is provided by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half-pint of witch hazel. Bathing the face in this solution brings prompt and remarkable results.—Dr. Rupert Mackenzie in Popular Medicine.

THE FIGHT IS NOW ON WITH FREE MASONRY

Hitherto on this continent The Roman Catholic Church has regarded Orangemen as its especial enemies. Now it is the Masons as well as the Orangemen. Moreover the ban has been put upon everything tainted by the Masonic touch as the following extract shows. Evidently the battle is only just beginning:

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

CRITICAL STAGE FOR ASQUITH AS SNAP VOTE IS FEARED

British Government Laboring Under Accumulation of Troubles Which May End in Defeat

London, June 7.—The Asquith Government is passing through another critical stage of its existence. Great depression and apprehension prevail among the ministerialists in the House of Commons, and they hardly conceal their fear that the crowning catastrophe may come any day, through another snap vote, leaving the government in the minority.

The government is laboring under an accumulation of troubles.

The Unionists are still keeping the Marconi affair open, knowing it is damaging the Liberals. Though nothing in the nature of corruption is proved, the belated disclosure of another 3000 share deal by the former Liberal chief whip, now Lord Murray of Elibank, in American Marconis enables the Unionists to stimulate suspicion that not all the facts have been brought out. They now suggest but dare not openly charge, that Murray, who had control of the party funds, paid for the shares out of the party funds.

Absence Looks Bad.

Murray who was made a peer on his retirement, is now in Bogota on a mission in behalf of Lord Cowdray's firm. His absence from England throughout the Marconi enquiry looks bad, and the worst is made of it by the government's opponents. It is also said that Murray's retirement forced Asquith into a quarrel over Attorney-General Rufus Isaacs' claim to the Lord Chancellorship. When Lord Loreburn retired from the chancellorship, Asquith was on his way to Gibraltar on a cruiser and Murray sent him this wireless:—"Loreburn resigned. Isaacs must have woolsack."

Asquith ignored this peremptory message and gave the woolsack to Lord Haldane without consulting Murray, whereupon the latter resigned.

Insurance Act.

Moreover, a campaign against the Insurance Act is being vigorously continued and the Unionists are persuading the working class that they have an alternative scheme which will provide greater benefits without anyone feeling the cost.

Hon Frank Cochrane

Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals has fully justified a prophesy made in The Times, when he was entrusted with this important portfolio. It will be remembered that The Times then intimated, in most inequivocal expression, that Mr. Cochrane was the "right man in the right place," at the head of this great spending department. His administration of this department has been characterized by a spirit born of the desire to see Canada's progress advanced, tinctured by a Conservative control of the Dominions funds. Mr. Cochrane is a man who considers that deeds speak louder, and with more lasting effect, than oratory.

CITY MUST OFFER PRICE FOR P. L. & P. CO'S PLANT

The Company Prefer to be Left Alone to do Their Own Business--Consequently are Not in Position of the Ordinary Vendor Desiring to Sell

In compliance with the resolution of the City Council, the City Clerk wrote the Electric Power Company, requesting them to fix a price at which they would sell their Peterborough Light and Power Company's electric distributing plant in this city with the council having recourse to expropriation proceedings. The reply was to hand Saturday, when the City's Power Committee met at 3 o'clock and considered the following communication:

"S. R. Armstrong, Esq.,
"City Clerk,
"Peterborough, Ont.

"Dear Sir,—Did your Council meet on Monday last as you expected? If so, I presume that it dealt with the question regarding the Peterborough Hydraulic Company's contract.

"In your letter of the 27th, you again asked me to let you know when we could give you a price for our property, but you do not specify what part of our property you want. Inasmuch as, under the act of last session, you are given power to take and use any part of our property, it seems to our Directors, before whom I placed this matter yesterday, that you ought to specify particularly what part your require, and what price you are willing to pay for it. Do you not think this is the proper way of going to work? As you well know, we are not anxious to sell our plant in Peterborough, as when we bought it three years ago we expected to serve your citizens for the term of our franchise. We consider that it is a very valuable property, and we prefer to be left alone to carry on our own business. This being the case, we feel that you should know what part of our property you want, and how much it is worth to you. At any rate this is the way the matter presents itself to some of our Directors. And I must say that it seems to me, under the circumstances, a most reasonable stand. We are not in the position of the ordinary vendor desiring to sell, but in the position of a company from whom you claim certain parts of its property can be expropriated, and you are asking us to make a friendly sale in order to relieve you from the necessity and delay of taking expropriation proceedings. This places you in the position of an offerer, and we will be glad to take the matter up with you along these lines by way of correspondence or meeting, as you desire.

"I trust that you will be able to submit this to your council at an early date, so that we can soon learn what your desires and intentions are.

"Kindly understand that all this correspondence is without prejudice to any recourse we may have as to the validity of your claims.

"Yours truly,
"A. B. COLVILLE."

Ald. Johnston, chairman of the Power Committee, contended that the company is only fencing, and said it is of no use attempting to deal with them in any way. He wanted the by-law passed to provide for appointing an arbitrator to take care of the city's interests in expropriation proceedings against the Electric Power Co.

City Solicitor, E. H. D. Hall, pointed out that the Power Committee must state definitely what part of the Peterborough Light and Power Company's property the city want.

"What part of their property!" exclaimed Ald. Johnston. "Why as I understand it, we want all their poles and wires, and transformers—everything connected with their present distributing system."

The solicitor here read the clause in the by-law prepared by him to meet the city's requirements, in regard to acquiring possession of the Peterborough Light and Power Company's distributing plant. The clause included poles, wires, transformers, lands, etc."

"Lands!" remarked Ald. Johnston; "what land?"

The Mayor—"We don't know of any land, but there may be some in connection with the company's system."

The City Solicitor here pointed out that before expropriation proceedings are instituted and an arbitrator for the city appointed, the city must first offer a price for the Peterborough Light and Power Company's plant. Failing to reach an agreement as to price, the city can then resort to arbitration under the Act.

On motion of Ald. Gordon and Buller, the City Clerk was instructed to write the Hydro-Electric Power Commission requesting them to report as to what sum Council should offer for the plant and assets of the Peterborough Light and Power Company, in view of the city's right to expropriate under the Act of 1913.

There were present, Chairman Ald. Johnston, Mayor Bradburn, Aldermen Buller and Gordon, and City Solicitor E. H. D. Hall.

DERBY SUFFRAGETTE IN SINKING CONDITION

Doctors Declare There Is No Hope For the Recovery of Miss Davidson.

Epsom, June 7.—Miss Emily Wilding Davidson, the suffragette who was severely injured in attempting to stop the King's horse while it was running in the Derby on Wednesday last, is in a critical and sinking condition at the local hospital.

The doctors in attendance declare that there is no hope for her recovery.

VANDALS AT SECTION SCHOOL 8 OTONABEE

Shortly after a patriotic entertainment was held recently at Section School No. 8, Otonabee, where it will be remembered that the forcing of a separate school on the section caused considerable trouble among the local ratepayers, the teacher on going into the building one morning, found that it had been entered through a forced window and, some damage done. Rev. Dr. O'Brien went at once to the scene and assured the trustees that no similar outrage will occur again.

LOCAL FIRM GETS BIG IRON CONTRACT

That the William Hamilton Co. is a live concern is proverbial. A contract involving about a quarter of a million dollars has been let for gates on the many locks on that part of the Trent Canal south of Peterborough. The contract has been let to Roger Miller & Sons of Toronto. The William Hamilton Co. have been awarded the sub-contract of furnishing the iron work on these lock gates. This company has also got a contract for the iron work on a lock for the Saskatchewan river at Prince Albert, Sask.

MILITANT SUFFRAGETTES GET SOME VERY HEAVY KNOCKS

Magistrate Refuses Remand and Jury Award London Tradesman Heavy Damages

London, June 7.—The police magistrate to-day refused to grant a remand for the preparation of their evidence to Mrs. Marianne Hyde, Miss Constance Andrews and Miss Ogilvie when they were brought up on the charge of obstruction in connection with their attempt to interrupt the deliberations of the Balkan peace conference at St. James' Palace yesterday. Each of them was fined five dollars, or as an alternative, 14 days imprisonment.

The prisoners unfurled suffragette banners while they were in the prisoners' enclosure and Mrs. Charlotte Despard shouted protests against the magistrate for refusing a remand.

A number of prominent suffragettes afterwards proceeded to the home office to present a protest, but Reginal McKenna, the home secretary, was absent.

Heavy Damages.

Mr. and Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, Miss Christabel Pankhurst and Miss Mabel Tuke, representing the Women's Social and Political Union, were today condemned by the King's Bench Court to pay $1840 damages in a suit brought by a number of west end London shopkeepers for damage done in smashing windows during suffragette raids. The hearing lasted three days.

As this was a test case, it is expected that many similar suits will follow.

CIVIC RECEPTION TO THE DELEGATES

Toronto, June 7.—About five thousand people attended the reception given by the city to the Presbyterian delegates on Saturday afternoon on the university quadrangle. The quandrangle part of the campus were enclosed with red and white awnings. There were two immense marquees, and the table decorations were red roses and yellow iris in big silver bowls. The 48th band and pipers were present and addresses were given by Controller McCarthy and Dr. Murdock MacKenzie the moderator.

HEAD SET ON FIRE BY LIGHTNING FLASH

Remarkable Experience of a Young Irishman on Moscow Avenue.

Toronto, June 7.—To be struck by lightning and set on fire was the unusual experience of a young Irishman in the east end on Friday night. Yet he escaped without the slightest noticeable injury.

The young man had recently met a severe injury to his head, as a result of a train accident, and was returning to his home from the doctor's, who had dressed the wound.

When approaching the corner of Moscow and Cruikshanks avenues the storm suddenly burst upon him, and he was driven back by the terrific force of the wind, which also caused him to lose his hat.

Just as his hat left his head a flash of lighting struck and ignited the liniment of the bandages. Fortunately, however, the blaze only lasted a second and did not take hold, and on being taken into the house close by, he was found to have been but little the worse for his adventure, except slightly dazed.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Not much change in temperature; warmer in some localities.

LUMBERJACK SLIPS HIS CUFFS AND SHOOTS TWO SHERIFFS DEAD

James Sutton and Alfred Scribner Killed by Russian After They Had Arrested Him for Stabbing at Camp Near the Soo

Sault Ste Marie, Ont., June 7.—Two men are dead and one seriously wounded as the result of a fight last night at Brimley, 12 miles from the Soo.

Joseph Tovens in custody of Deputy Sheriffs James Sutton and Alfred Scribner of Brimley, slipped his handcuffs, and drawing a revolver turned it on both men and shot them dead.

Tovens, a Russian lumberjack, was wanted for stabbing Joe Teeple during a fight at Brimley last night. The double shooting occured at the lumber camp of Otto Schoales, near Wellsburg. Tovens made his escape and is hiding somewhere in the woods.

A posse of farmers, lumberjacks, and rifle men, armed with axes, rifles pitchforks, canthooks and anything they could lay their hands on, are scouring the woods.

Tovens had not been found at noon. Sheriff Bone and five deputies left this morning to join the searchers and protect Tovens in case he is found.

Brimley is in a high state of excitement, and officials fear for Tovens' safety.

PEACE DELEGATES RECEIVED AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE

His Majesty Entertaining Balkan and Turkish Delegates at Luncheon

London, June 7.—King George entertained the peace delegates of the Balkan States and of Turkey at luncheon at Buckingham Palace on Saturday, to celebrate the signing of the treaty of peace. Other guests included the Duke of Connaught, governor-general of Canada, Premier Asquith, Foreign Secretary Sir Edward Grey, and the Viscount Morley of Blackburn, lord president of the council.

While peace is being celebrated in London, the situation in the Near East is still threatening.

The position of the Servian cabinet is said to be unsafe, but the resignation of the ministers had not been announced up to noon to-day.

WELL KNOWN AUTHOR'S BROTHER GUILTY OF LIBEL

London, June 7.—A verdict of guilty was returned against Cecil Chesterton, a brother of G. K. Chesterton, the author, at the central criminal court to-day on a charge of criminal libel.

Accused had charged Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of the Marconi Company, in articles written in the Eye-Witness and The New Witness, with corruption in connection with the British Government's wireless contract. Some of the most prominent counsel at the English bar were engaged in the case.

Chesterton was fined $500 and all the costs of the prosecution, which will be exceedingly heavy, as the trial lasted ten days. He is to be kept in prison until the fine has been paid.

WATCHMAN AT WINDSOR BOILED ALIVE, BOILING TAR

Windsor, Ont., June 7.—Oscar Lowes, watchman employed at the plant of the Dominion Roofing Co., while making his rounds at the plant at four o'clock this morning tripped and plunged into a huge vat of boiling tar.

Grasping the red hot sides of the vat, he endeavoured to keep himself from falling back into the seething liquid, and he finally succeeded in getting out and, crawling on his hands and knees, made his way to the nearest place where he could get help, a quarter of a mile away.

Finally, knocking at a door of a cottage, he awakened the inmates, who seeing his plight, hitched up a team and rushed him to the hospital where death relieved his sufferings a few hours later.

He was conscious until the end came, and despite his terrible agony told the story of his desperate attempts to escape being cooked alive.

POWER COMMISSION GIVES REASON FOR POLE LINE IN REAR OF PROPERTIES

Will Save Many Thousand Dollars and Give Much Better Street Lighting Than The System Estimated On-- To Eliminate 107 Wooden Poles on Main Street

Although The Times has been credited with intelligently recording the reasons offered by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario for suggesting the installation of a pole line at the rear of properties in centre city for commercial lighting, we publish below an outline of the situation prepared by the Commission's engineering department in Toronto. The communication in this regard received by the city reads as follows:

"Mr. S. R. Armstrong,
"City Clerk,
"Peterboro., Ont.

"Dear Sir,—In view of the fact that there has been considerable discussion in your council and also in your local papers covering the recommendations of this Commission on the subject of underground street lighting, we believe that perhaps it would be well to briefly outline our reasons for strongly recommending as we have, the installation of an underground system for street lighting only, in that portion of the city where ornamental street lighting is proposed.

"At the request of your Corporation an estimate was made of the cost of installing a distribution system for the city, including an underground ornamental street lighting system for part of George and Charlotte streets. A summary of this estimate was forwarded in our letter of November 6th, 1912.

"This estimate being made at your request, was made to cover the cost of an installation similar to that in use in Toronto and a number of other municipalities. On the approval of your ratepayers, your Council requested us to proceed with the plans for the installation of the necessary system for ornamental street lighting on these streets, and we were asked to give our recommendations as to the method of lighting to be used.

"Subsequent to this statement being made, we found that recent improvements in the magnetite arc lamp, and in the design of special fixtures for their use, rendered it commercially practicable to use this more effective method of street illumination. We also found that the proposed use of an underground system for this district would do away with only 37 poles on these streets, and there would still be 107 wooden poles supporting the trolley span wires which could not be removed, and these poles would, to a great extent, destroy the effect of the ornamental street lighting system and leave appearance of the street as at present. It was also found that a great number of services in this district were made from poles in the alleys and on private property behind the business blocks on these streets, and by adding six poles to the present poles, making in all 37 poles principally in alleys, but a few on private property, a complete distribution system could be installed to give all the lighting and power service required in these blocks.

"As a result of this investigation, we recommend the use of an underground system for street lighting, using magnetite arc lamps on steel poles which would be spaced so that they could be utilized for the trolley span wires and thereby do away with the 107 poles belonging to the Railway Co. The secondary or low tension wires were to be run in the alleys which called for the use of only 6 more poles than at present installed back of the business blocks.

"We have heard of a number of objections which have been raised and the first was that we were interfering with Peterborough's own affairs. Our defence in this is that we were asked to give our recommeodations and we did so. Possibly we were insistent, but it should be realized that our recommendations with the saving of many thousand dollars, gave a much better street lighting system than the one estimated on, did away with all the trolley wire poles, and saved all the lighting consumers in this district a large expense through obviating the necessity of changing their main leads inside of their buildings from the upper storeys to the basement.

"We also heard that these wires back of the business blocks would be dangerous. The voltage is merely the lamp voltage and is dangerous to no one, the same voltage being used on the wires as is used inside the houses

"In regard to the agreement which has been submitted to the property owners on whose property it is proposed to locate the six poles, we would say that this agreement is thoroughly practical having been used by a number of other municipalities and being very largely used by many companies.

"Yours truly,

"HYDRO-ELECTRIC POWER COMMISSION OF ONTARIO
"(Sgd.) F. A. Gaby,
"Chief Engineer."

MINE DISASTER AT SHAMOKIN

Two Killed and Several Injured in Explosion, Other Men are Entombed

Shamokin, Pa., June 7.—Two miners were killed and more than a dozen were injured to-day in an explosion in the Scott shaft, four miles from here, operated by the Susquehanna Coal Co.

Officials of the company announce that no men were entombed, but the mine workers declared that they believed other men were still in the mine. The explosion occurred in the second lift of a slope, almost a mile underground, and the slope immediately caught fire.

John Weir, inside superintendent, and his assistants, organized a rescuing party and within an hour two dead and fourteen injured were brought to the surface. The dead men were foreign speaking miners and nearly all of the injured are also foreigners. Of the injured at least two are expected to die.

After several hours' work the rescuing party came on a group of 20 men in the burning shaft. They were unhurt and taken to the surface. It is not believed any more men are in the mine.

TORONTO WILL AGAIN SEE "DEBORAH"

Toronto, June 7.—Toronto will see "Deborah" after all. It ran for three nights late in May, was pinched by Rev. Mr. Coburn, prohibited by Police Magistrate Denison and suppressed by Inspector Stephen.

But there was a come-back. Judge Morson quashed the conviction against the manager and players for producing an immoral play, and the play which was presented for the first time on any stage at the Princess Theatre, May 19, is revived.

Carlotta Nillson and the complete cast that presented the piece here before will be seen in the revival. It will be played as passed and approved by the official censor of the City of Toronto.

Manager Maynard Waite stated on Saturday that he felt that in justice to the members of the company and the author, the piece should have a further hearing in Toronto now that the courts had stated that the play was opportune and taught a great moral lesson.

HORSES KILLED BY LIGHTNING

Moose Jaw, June 7.—O. M. Martin's barn, two miles west of Drinkwater, was struck by lightning yesterday and totally destroyed, together with two horses.

DIED IN DRUNKEN BRAWL

Moose Jaw, June 7.—Constable Spotten, R.N.W.M.P., is investigating a murder near Avonlea, bare details of which have just reached here. It appears that while drunk two men had a fight and one died; the other skipped the country before the trouble over the death started. No names are yet available.

BASEBALL

The Petes again went down to defeat at Hamilton on Saturday, the Ambitious City aggregation putting it over them by a score of 7—2. This was Belting's first lose and although he pitched an excellent game, the Petes couldn't connect with the Hamilton twirler.

Mercantile League.

The games at Riverside Park on Saturday between the Typos and the Quakers, and the Canoe Builders and Draughting Dept. were witnessed by about two hundred fans. In the first game, Typos vs. Quakers, a good exhibition of ball was handed out, and the game throughout was clean and very tight. The Typos defeated the Quakers by a score of 5—2.

[illegible] CORDIAL

Advertisements under above heads, 20 words and under, one insertion, 15c.; 3 insertions, 25c.; 6 insertions, 40c.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 25c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 3c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 25c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., [illegible] George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

THE NORTH AMERICAN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

Is practically a mutual one, with the protection afforded by a guarantee fund upon which interest is paid. While such fund is only $60,000.00, the guaranters are liable for five times this amount; so that the position admirably reflects the best points of stock and mutual companies. The Directorate is composed of both policy holders and guaranters.

KITCHEN KEYNOTES FOR HOUSEWIVES

To keep a carpet in good condition go over it once a week with a broom dipped in hot water to which a little turpentine has been added.

When cutting a cake which is iced put your knife in boiling water for a few seconds. You will then be able to cut without the icing breaking.

To clean plaster casts dip them in cold liquid starch; when they dry the starch is brushed off and the dirt comes off with it, leaving the casts as clean and white as when new.

To whiten a doorstep mix a little quicklime with half a pint of skim milk. Having first washed the doorstep, paint it over with this mixture, and the rain will not wash it off.

When soaking cauliflower prior to cooking it place it in unsalted wtaer. This draws out the insects. If the water is salted the insects are killed but remain in the vegetable.

When about to roast a joint cover it with a rind saved from a piece of ham or bacon and cook with it on. This will save the trouble of constant basting and will prevent the joint from burning or drying.

To relieve asthma soak a piece of blotting paper in a strong solution of saltpetre. Dry it, then cut into pieces two inches square; place on a plate in the bedroom and set light to it. Great relief will be experienced.

If a mustard poultice or plaster is mixed with vinegar instead of water all risk of a chill to the patient is avoided. If the white of an egg is used for mixing, the poultice will not even blister the most delicate skin.

Velvet that has been spotted with the rain should not be brushed dry. Shake the velvet and leave it. The water will evaporate and show no mark, unless the velvet was damp before getting wet. In that case wipe the velvet while still damp with a clean damp cloth. This will remove the dust. Then shake well and leave to dry.

In ironing garments on which there are hooks and eyes, care should be taken not to press the hooks together so that they have to be prised open in order to use again. The best way to prevent this is to place a folded towel underneath the part on which the hooks are sown. When ironed on the folds of the towel the hooks will come out as good as new.

One of the best and simplest methods of ventilating a bedroom is that of procuring a piece of wood four inches in depth and of the same breadth as the window, and inserting this along the bottom of the frame after raising the lower sash. The window should then be lowered on to the strip of wood, fresh air entering the room in the centre between the two sashes.

Before peeling apples for pies it is a good plan to place them in the oven for a few minutes, as this facilitates the removal of the skin. Hot water should first be poured over them. They should then be drained and placed on the top shelf of the oven for a few minutes, the door being left ajar. At the end of this time the apples should be removed and the skins slightly pared off with a sharp knife when there will be much less waste than if they were peeled in the ordinary manner.

The white gown illustrated is exceedingly charming. It is of white Sicilienne and is a Premet model. The skirt is very long all the way around and has an overlapping drapery drawn up on one side. The coat is of white and is cut with a wide panel in back which reaches about to the knees. The waist worn with this costume is of white chiffon and lace.

Big Betting Cheque

Mr. Francis Kenny, a bookmaker, at Liverpool sought to recover from an Irish landowner, Mr. James Browne, of County Meath, $5,000 due on a dishonored cheque.

The jury found that the cheque was given for money owing on betting transactions. It was clearly a wagering contract, said the judge, and the action could not succeed. Judgment was given for the defendant.

NAVAL STATION BY NATURAL RIGHT

From its very beginning, Halifax, Nova Scotia, was destined to be a Naval station for British ships, its natural advantages claiming every right to that honor, and by way of recognition of this suitability there was established, in 1758, the beginnings of the dockyard.

In 1758-9 Halifax was the rendezvous for an army and navy meant to attack the positions of the French in Canada and the Dockyard, then furnished with a careening wharf and mast house, played a part by no means unimportant in the fitting out of the vessels destined to win for the British Empire the whole of Canada. Up to the close of the war in 1763, Halifax was the rendezvous of many transports and ships of the line who kept the Dockyard busy supplying and repairing them.

In 1765 a lot of land adjoining the north end of the naval yard was granted by Montague Wilmot, captain-general and Governor of Nova Scotia, to the Right Hon. Alex. Covill, rear-admiral and commander-in-chief and his heirs and successors in the command for extension of the naval yard.

In 1783 John Pan, captain-general and governor-in-chief of Nova Scotia granted a lot of about 20 acres to George Thomas, naval storekeeper, and to John Haliburton, surgeon, and agent for hurt and sick seamen of H.M. Royal Navy. In 1770 the excavation earth from the citadel was used to fill up the southern end of the yard. In 1790 five and one half acres adjoining the yard were deeded over to the naval authorities by the executors of Joshua Mager. In 1784 a new naval hospital was erected

The difference between France and England during the Napoleonic Wars led to no small number of marine engagements between the rival nations and their allies in American waters and the Dockyard lived in stirring times. Shattered ships of war were repaired and re-fitted, and foreign prizes made into British ships of the line. Prison hulks were anchored off the busy wharves and French and Spanish prisoners kept on board.

The most noticeable feature of that period was the arrival in port in the year 1813 of the British ship-of-war the Shannon, accompanied by her prize, the Chesapeake, which she worsted in the battle of the 1st of June, 1813. The two ships anchored off the Dockyard, and the wounded men were taken ashore and cared for.

On New Year's Day, 1907, the H.M. Dockyard passed into the possession and control of the Dominion government, and the keys were handed over by the Imperial officer in charge to the representatives of the Canadian government.

Improvement on Films

A new motion picture film has three rows of pictures, side by side, the projecting machine automatically switching the light from one to another at the right instant.

Wicker Lifeboat

A new Dutch lifeboat is covered with wickerwork which its inventor claims will protect it from damage by striking the side of a ship.

Boon to Shavers

A new mirror for men who shave themselves has a suction base, enabling it to be attached to almost any surface and in any position.

A Twelve-Year-Old Forger

A boy of twelve, Harry Victor White, who had been taught at school as part of a commercial education to draw cheques, was charged at Eltham (Kent) with forging a cheque for $32. The Bench ordered him to be given six strokes of the birch.

Rabbits in Australia

Rabbits are well known to be the curse of Australia, says the Scientific American: notwithstanding the fact that, according to the view of the commonwealth meteorologist, Mr. H. A. Hunt, the burrows of these animals by keeping the ground broken up make it more retentive of rainfall—a philosophical consideration that strongly suggests Mark Tapley. Lately, the Australians have been trying with considerable success to turn their curse into a blessing by marketing their surplus rabbits (dressed) in European countries.

Lifting Pig Iron With Magnet

It is quite a common practice to use lifting magnets for handling furnace pig iron. Usually the pigs are stacked horizontally and not many of them can be lifted at a time because a relatively small number can be brought into contact with the magnet. Someone recently hit upon the idea of stacking the pigs vertically, so that the face of the magnet will touch a greater number of pigs. It was found that by this method, the lifting capacity of a magnet which heretofore was able to raise only 1,000 pounds of pig iron was increased to 2,000 pounds.

Electric Hats Now

A late invention, used abroad, is a scheme for keeping cool in hot weather. A fan is attached to a small storage battery, which is fastened in the crown of top hats, the fan working just above the head. The motor is started by touching a switch on the rim.

"The Light Beer in the Light Bottle" registered really is the home beer.

EDITORIAL NOTES

What has become of the old-fashioned girl who used to wear a blue gingham sunbonnet?

The British Admiralty asked for bread—Laurier offers them a stone.

Some day, perhaps, we shall have a law requiring a pint to be a pint, and then those cute little strawberry boxes, with the bottoms nearer the top than the bottom, will disappear.

"The policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier means one result and one result only, severance of every tie that binds this Dominion to the Empire." Premier Borden at Toronto.

Since the senate has throttled the naval bill Great Britain must now construct the three vessels that Mr. Borden had made provision for.

In order to prevent guests from blowing out the gas in their innocent and unsophisticated way, many of the hotels have barred gas; but this does not prevent the rural visitor from trying to blow out the electric light bulb.

Three sugar barrels filled with bottles of gin were seized by License Inspector Beckett a few days ago at Owen Sound. The barrels were consigned to Messrs. Taylor & Pringle, who disclaim any knowledge of the affair, and it is assumed that the liquor was shipped to their address although intended for some other party.

The peace delegates doubtless at New York, experienced a thrill when they were entertained by the Hon. Ted Roosevelt wearing a khaki uniform and a pair of cavalry spurs. The Hon. Ted is strong for peace when it is well stocked with gunpowder and there is a loud explosion every two or three minutes.

In Los Angeles a verdict was set aside because a juror snored while the attorney for the defendant was summing up. This should be a warning to lawyers to cut the anesthetics out of their arguments.

We fear that the weather prognosticators who have been predicting the warmest summer on record are going to hit the mark this time, for there is no doubt that the backbones of winter and spring have been broken and the sizzling season is now upon us.

The Hon. Ted Roosevelt has testified that he "drinks whiskey only" when it is prescribed by his physician, or when he is exposed to exceedingly cold weather, or when he has been in a rainstorm. This reminds us of old Dick McBride, who solemnly asserted that he never took a drink except when wet or dry, or when he was by himself or with somebody.

Two proposals were before the senate. The government proposal was that Canada should do her duty in aiding in the naval defence of the empire. The Liberal proposal was that Hon. Sydney Fisher, Hon. Mackenzie King and one or two other seat-hungry ex-ministers be given a chance to get back into the house of Commons. The latter proposal carried the senate's approval.

In private conversation, Sir George Ross gave it to be understood that he was so strong an Imperialist he would not countenance the killing of the Navy Bill by the Senate, and some public men who did not know him believed what he said: Had they known him they would have known that he would do anything to embarrass a Conservative Government.

A news item says Mrs. Edna Louise Adams, who passed fictitious checks in Los Angeles, has been sentenced to live in a bungalow in the suburbs under the following restrictions: She cannot visit the city unaccompanied, take auto rides after dark, leave the bungalow without permission, drink intoxicants or smoke cigarettes. But she is allowed to shop with her housekeeper, entertain when chaperoned, use an auto in the day time, visit the theater occasionally and study music, painting and domestic science. What frightful punishment is that! Our sympathy goes out to the unhappy Edna in torrents.

If Breathing is Difficult, If Nostrils Are Plugged, You Have Catarrh

At Last a Remedy that already has Permanently Cured Thousands.

Perhaps you haven't heard of this new remedy—it's so pleasant to use—fills the nose, throat and lungs with a healing balsamic vapor like the air of the pine woods. It's really a wonderful remedy—utilizes that marvelous antiseptic only found in the Blue Gum tree of Australia.

The name of this grand specific is Catarrhozone, and you can't find its equal on earth for coughs, colds, catarrh or throat trouble. You see it's not longer necessary to drug the stomach—that spoils digestions—just simply inhale the balsamic essences of Catarrhozone, which are so rich in healing that they drive out every trace of Catarrh in no time.

"I look upon Catarrhozone as the most valuable medical discovery of recent years," writes R. V. Potter, of Prince Albert. "As a long sufferer from nasal and throat catarrh I was obliged to take considerable medicine and, although it helped me, my digestion was always disturbed and the catarrh didn't go away. With Catarrhozone it was different. It cleaned my nose and throat of all phlegm and discharged a stuffy feeling in my nose and frontal headaches. To-day I am entirely free from Catarrh, and I use my Catarrhozone Inhaler a little every day in order to prevent the disease from returning."

With Catarrhozone experimenting ends. A permanent curative action begins. Lasting relief from Catarrh results. The large size costs $1.00, last two months and is guaranteed. Small size 50c.; sample size 25. All storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

DRINKING AT MEALS.

We used to be told that drinking much water during mealtime was very bad for the health, through probably some of us persisted in the habit notwithstanding the warnings. But now we are strongly advised to continue it, or, if we have not formed it, to do so at once. A professor in the University of Illinois has been carrying on an elaborate series of experiments with students, and he has found that drinking water at all meals is a great help to digestion, increasing the assimilative power to such an extent as to make a noticeable improvement in the general health of the students experimented with. The maximum amount of water to be taken at each meal, he thinks, to be a quart, but nearly this amount can be taken with advantage by most people. The only warning he gives is that the food should be carefully chewed and swallowed, and not washed down with water. His arguments seem scientific and reasonable. We are convinced that many people would have better health if they drank a great deal more water, both at meals and between them.

ELECTRICITY FOR FREIGHT TRAINS

The Norfolk and Western Railroad is about to electrify about seventy-five miles of track, including yards, in the southern part of West Virginia, where some of the railroad grades are as steep as two feet in every hundred feet. The company's chief business in that district is coal and it has been necessary to break up trains into small sections, so that a continuous procession of coal trains passes over its lines. Through electrification, the railroad company expects to be able to make up large trains and to utilize much more of a trackage now overburdened with freight traffic.

Instead of steam locomotives making and carrying their own power will be electric locomotives of a very large type, drawing upon unlimited power created cheaply at coal mines in the district. The Electric Railway Journal, commenting upon the enterprise, says that "the only surprising feature of the proposed electrification is that it can be classed as the first of its kind in this country, where so many similar situations exist."

Electric propulsion for the purpose of carrying passengers has been tested with perfectly satisfactory results on several of the Eastern railroad systems but the Norfolk and Western Railroad will provide the hardest kind of test in an effort to solve the problem of freight haulage, and from all accounts little doubt is entertained as to the outcome.

TESTED RECIPES

Some Culinary Lore Recommended by Canadian Housewives

Beef Sausages.—Free half a pound beef suet from skin, and shred finely. Pass a pound of lean beef through a mincing machine several times. Mix with the suet, season to taste with salt and pepper, and pound in a mortar. Press into skins.

Ground Rice Cake.—Beat a quarter of a pound of butter to a cream. Stir in half a pound of castor sugar, three well-beaten eggs, a handful of washed and dried currants, a little well-chopped ground rice mixed with four ounces of flour. Mix thoroughly, put into a paper-lined tin, and bake without loss of time in a good oven.

Relish Sauce.—Bone half a [illegible] anchovies, pound them in a mortar together with six small cloves garlic, or three whole shallots, three bruised cloves, and a saltspoonful of cayenne pepper. Put half a pint each of mushroom catsup, walnut pickle and soy into a saucepan, add the pounded mixture, and simmer for ten minutes. Strain, bottle, and store in a cool, dry place.

Savory Potatoes.—Peel and slice sufficient potatoes to make a pint, place them in a well-buttered pie-dish. Beat up an egg in half a pint of milk, add pepper, salt, teaspoonful of chopped parsley, pour over the potatoes, cover, and bake for twenty minutes. Remove the cover and return to the oven to brown.

Swiss Roll.—Butter a shallow baking tin and stand it in a warm place. Put two tablespoonfuls of raspberry jam into a cup and place on the top of the oven so that it can become thoroughly warm. Break two large eggs into a basin, add four ounces of sifted castor sugar, place the basin in a bowl of hot water, and whisk with an egg beater for ten minutes. Remove the basin from the water, and whisk for a further ten minutes. Have ready three ounces of flour mixed with half a teaspoonful of baking powder. Fold it into the batter very lightly, flavor with a few drops of vanilla, pour into the prepared tin and bake for about eight minutes in a hot oven. In the meantime sprinkle a sheet of white paper with castor sugar. Turn the cake over on to the sugar, cut round the edges with a sharp knife, spread with the hot jam, and roll up immediately. If any time be lost from the moment of removing the cake from the oven to the rolling of it up it will crack.

FANS LIKE BASE STEALERS

All the Managers Are Out After Speed Merchants

Baseball fans like clever pitching, delight in plenty of slugging, enthuse over sensational fielding, but enjoy no feature of the game more than the art of base-running. Nothing excites the fans more than some bit of daring on the base lines. What could be more thrilling than a cleverly executed steal of home, with the winning run of the game.

Speed, properly converted, is the main asset of every successful team, and the crying need of every club that is in the rut. A team that always needs a bunch of hits to get only a few runs is a club that will not be at all dangerous in the long run. It is the team that is always taking chances on the bases, the club that makes its opportunities, that generally cuts in on the world's series melon. When a baseball club is going badly inject a little speed into the aggregation and it will usually take on renewed life and energy at once.

MILK AND MUSIC

Piano Keys and Similar Objects Products of the Dairy

It is a little-known fact that the most delightful music at the present day is produced by playing on milk. The supply of ivory nowadays does not, to a great extent, meet the demand. Strange as it may sound, skim-milk forms a substitute. It is used for making the keyboards of pianos, and in appearance this hardened substance is hardly distinguishable from ivory. What is more, it is much less expensive, and its durability nearly double.

Syrolit, as the skim-milk ivory is named, is a practically new invention, but at the present time thousands of gallons of separated milk are daily transformed into one of the most useful materials of modern invention. The milk is not mixed with any other substance, but, after being purified, it is compressed, so that all the moisture is extracted, and the substance becomes hard and dry.

Practically in every part of the globe this product is now used. It is turned into umbrella handles, buttons, photograph frames, etc. The comb-making industry especially appreciates its worth, as it can be made to look like horn. Its non-inflammability is another of its assets.

Exquisite Draperies

The model of the illustration is by Doucet, who with Mme. Paquin was the first to introduce draperies. It is of white brocade with velvet chrysanthemums in those queer colorings of burnt orange and tawney bronze that you sometimes see in the natural flower. The material is so exquisitely beautiful that there are no other garnitures than a lace tucker and sleeves over which there is a drapery of the brocade.

This "tucker," which looks like a waist or chemise drawn up about the low neck with a string has leaped into popularity since it was first used by Doucet.

Notice the pleats at the high waistline. This is a feature of many of the new gowns. This dress was worn at an opening at the Vaudeville theater, Paris, by one of the most popular of French actresses.

Human Nature

If all that hate would love us and all our loves were true,
The stars that swing above us would brighten in the blue;
If cruel words were kisses and every scowl a smile,
A better world than this would hardly be worth while.

If purses would untighten to meet a brother's need,
The load we bear would lighten above
the grave of greed,
If those who whine would whistle and those who languish, laugh,
The rose would rout the thistle, the grain outrun the chaff.

If hearts were only jolly, if grieving were forgot,
And tears and melancholy were things that now are not—
Then Love would kneel to duty and all the world would seem,
A bridal bower of beauty, a dream within a dream.

Dew and fog indicate fine weather; whilst remarkable clearness of the atmosphere is one of the most characteristic signs of coming rain.

Stomach gas is frequently caused by fermentation of foods not properly digested. Intestinal fermentation causes intestinal gases. Sour milk and cheese diet diminishes it. Overeating, hurried eating and too long waits between meals are all common aids to the formation of stomach gas.

If what seem to be "mere colds" were less commonly neglected tuberculosis would more often be caught in its incipient state and pneumonia and diphtheria would frequently be prevented.

KITCHEN HELPS

Permanganate of potash will cleanse dirty filters of all impurities. A solution should be passed through the filter until it comes out as pink as when it was poured in.

Tar may be removed from the hands by rubbing with the outside of fresh orange or lemon peel and drying immediately. The volatile oils dissolve tar so that it can be rubbed off.

Cayenne pepper is excellent to rid cupboards of mice. The floor should be gone over carefully, and each hole stopped up with a piece of rag dipped in water and then in cayenne pepper.

When a tin lid is very hard to remove, instead of struggling to loosen it with a knife just hold the tin up endways and give a few taps with a hammer, and it will loosen immediately.

Very frequently when separating the whites from the yolks of eggs the yolk becomes broken and falls into the white. Dip a cloth in warm water, wring it dry, and touch the yolk with a corner of it. The yolk will adhere to the cloth, and may be easily removed.

If great care is not taken flat irons easily become rusted. The following is a good way to clean them when this occurs. Tie a lump of beeswax in a piece of rag, and when the irons are hot rub them with this. Then rub them well with salt on a cloth, and they will be quite smooth and clean.

TURKISH RULE ALWAYS A CURSE

The provinces which now compose Asiatic Turkey have had a stirring history; but in the main it was a history of prosperity. They were prosperous under Babylonian, Median and Persian rulers. They were prosperous under the Greek, under the Roman, under the Byzantine empire, under the Arabian caliphs. They were prosperous until the Turk came, and then their prosperity ended.

The Turk is the locust plague of history.

Asiatic Turkey includes one of the richest districts of the world, in Western Asia Minor. Thirty centuries ago the Greeks had made this region a garden. Earlier than that, perhaps, the kings of Troy held sway there. The second greatest library of the ancient world was located in a Greek city on this coast. Half a dozen splendid cities arose on the rich plains.

Now only one city of importance is left, and that is maintained by Greeks, whose industry even Turkish tyranny has not quite availed to destroy.

Asiatic Turkey includes Palestine and Phenicia. It includes the sites of Babylon and Nineveh. It includes Damascus and Bagdad. It embraces regions of considerable mineral wealth and vast provinces of wonderful fertility. But wealth and fertility count for little under the sway of the Turk.

ROMANCE NOT DEAD

But Some of the Old-time Frills Discarded in Modern Life

No, Romance is not dead, but it takes a different form in this practical age.

The man of to-day can love just as fervently as in the days of sighs and verse. An exaggerated romantic wooing and a Gretna Green marriage do not appeal to the practical-day maid. Imagine her consternation if her lover serenaded her at night, or suggested an elopement! She prefers a man who will get about his business and provide a good time for her.

Instead of maintaining a lordly reserve as to his business and income the man of to-day [illegible] both [illegible] his wife, and her [illegible] helpful. It is [illegible] of him [illegible] books [illegible] before [illegible] realises [illegible] done her [illegible], it is eminently more practical.

The tales of [illegible] gallants make [illegible] but [illegible] doubtful if [illegible] would compensate the woman of to-day for a sparsely laid table.

And Chivalry—well, outwardly chivalry has decreased. Woman stands with man in nearly every field of the labor market, and naturally the attitude she assumes does not give rise to over-chivalrous feelings on the part of a man. But womanly bearing will always call forth courtesy in the average man.

Woman takes a different stand in a man's thoughts to-day to what she did in the [illegible] early Victorian age. To-day she is accepted more as a comrade and practical helpmate than she was then. She is not regarded as a divinity, neither is a man regarded as a paragon of virtues. Men and women know each other now as they really are—more alive to each other's limitations, and the knowledge creates a true love based on reality, not a high-flown, sentimental ideal.

The girl of to-day is educated with her brother, and takes her stand in the world with him; she realizes, when grown up, that other men are but a counterpart—she does not expect perfection. But it is a man who combines the tenderness of love with a practical eye to the present and future that the woman of the present day values.

Washing Painted Wood

The easiest and quickest way of cleaning paint is to have two pails of water, one cold, to which a tablespoonful of ammonia has been added, and one hot, with the addition of a little ammonia and soap powder. With a soft flannel wash the paint with the soapy water, then rinse with the cold water, using wash leather instead of the flannel, and wring the leather fairly dry. Paint washed like this dries with a nice polish, which no amount of drying with cloths and using hot water alone will impart.

Mrs. Young has been station mistress at Alverstone Station, in the Isle of Wight, for a dozen years or more. Her husband is a platelayer on the line, her two brothers crane drivers, her uncle a fireman, her two elder sons clerks, and her brother-in-law a crane driver.

An Exaggeration of the Barrel Costume

Shot for Wild Animal

Thinking some wild animal was trying to get into his cabin a laborer on the G.T.P. near Edmonton, fired through the wooden door from his bed and the bullet struck Carl Struchenburg, his "bunkie," who was just returning from a fishing trip. The wound was not a serious one.

Horse Bit off Finger

While poking grass through a crack in the barn, the five-year-old daughter of James L. Sebers, a farmer living near St. Catharines, had her index finger completely bitten off by a horse

NO WOMAN LAWYERS IN GREAT BRITAIN

Many Countries However, Admit Them to the Bar—Some Views on Both Sides of the Question

By an overwhelming majority a large meeting of British barristers, distinguished and otherwise, rejected, at the Inner Temple Hall a proposal that women should be permitted to practise at the Bar. In France, Russia, Switzerland, the United States, and many British dominions, including Canada, women are allowed to practise as barristers, and many of them have proved ornaments of the Bar in more senses than one.

It seems to be purely owing to old-fashioned prejudice that ladies are not allowed to invade the legal profession in England in the manner in which they have invaded other professions hitherto deemed the prerogative of man. And it was this prejudice which aroused the indignation of Miss Christabel Pankhurst some years ago when, after taking the degree of bachelor of law with honors at the Victoria University, Manchester, in 1905, she was refused admission as a law student at Lincoln's Inn.

A Woman's Opinion

Curiously enough, at the time members of the English Bar were discussing whether women should be admitted to the legal profession, Mrs. Ethel de Costa, LL.B., a lady who practises as a lawyer and solicitor in the Supreme Court of New Zealand, arrived in England on a visit. Mrs. de Costa is convinced that the time will come when women will practise in the English Courts. She is sure that women are eminently fitted for certain classes of legal work, particularly matrimonial and separation cases, in many of which she has appeared for the woman, her clients being principally ladies, although her services are sought by a fair sprinkling of men.

Similar views are held by Mme. Rachel Vaille, who was admitted to the Bar in Geneva.

Brilliant Advocates

Mme. Vaille did not take up law from a financial point of view, but simply to help women, though she receives men clients. "I think," she says, "the woman lawyer can defend a woman prisoner, especially in penal cases, better than a man counsel because there is more sympathy between women, and in delicate cases a woman will confide more to a female lawyer than to a man."

On the other hand, Chief Justice Sir John Madden, of Australia, considers that ladies entering the legal profession are handicapped by nature and sex. "Women," said Chief Justice Madden when Miss Greta Flos Matilda Greig, the first lady barrister of the Commonwealth, was called to the Bar in Melbourne, "are naturally more sympathetic than judicial, more emotional than logical. Besides, knowledge of the world is quite as essential to success at the Bar as knowledge of the law."

At the present time there are over a dozen lady barristers in France, and in the States women have practised at the Bar for some thirty years, and altogether there are some forty women barristers appearing in the courts in that country.

HAT FOR BROWN EYES

Prettily dressed children constitute half the brightness of almost any scene in which humanity plays a part. So children's fashions have grown to be a business too.

As much thought may be expended in the attire of the little maid as the debutante, with equally as attractive results; the chief difference being that it is possible to make all sorts of becoming apparel for a four-year-old with the odds and ends which so often find their way to the scrap bag. One of the best ways of using up pieces is upon the small lady's separate hat. A silk elastic, passing under the chin, prevents the chapeau shown on the head of this pretty owner from blowing off

SCOTCH GIRLS' FRIEND

Mrs. Radford Undertook Big Task at Advanced Age

Mrs. Jane Radford, founder and principal of the Women's Canadian Employment Bureau of Montreal, has big ideas for encouraging the best type of Scotch immigrant girls to come to Canada.

Mrs. Radford is considerably over the alotted span of years, and a very interesting story she had to tell of her work among girls who forsake the Old for the New World. Her public life commenced by her appointment to the Selecting Committee of an agency which was bringing girls out to Canada by the hundred. Her experience in this capacity gave her an idea of the great injustice done by the system under which these girls were sent out. Promises were made that never could be realized, with the result that disappointment and despair invariably made miserable the existence of girls who left the Old Country full of high hopes and ambitions. Realizing all this, Mrs. Radford, although seventy-four years of age, went to Canada and asked to be permitted to put her scheme into operation. That was to tell the truth with regard to the wages domestic servants would receive; to give opportunities to girls to select whom they should work for and see that the particular work of a domestic servant was made clear to her before any contract was closed; and to provide amusement and social intercourse for the girls during their free hours. This was rather a big undertaking for a woman, but the Women's Canadian Employment Bureau was organised as the result of Mrs. Radford's efforts, and part of its activity consists in bringing the girls into touch with ministers of their own denomination, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic; and giving them the advantage of a home at a very low rate for at least twenty-four hours after their arrival—a rest being desirable after the fatigue of their passage. To perform all these obligations, Mrs. Radford arranged a system of work which does her credit.

HEROES IN OVERALLS

The work of the Carnegie hero fund commission since its fund became operative April 15, 1904, is briefly told in these figures:

Total number of awards, 583.

Awarded to wage workers, 406.

Awarded to students and schoolboys, 92.

Awarded to business men, 33.

Awarded to professional men, 25.

Awarded to women and girls, 31.

A large number of the awards made to wage workers is admittedly traceable to the fact that they are engaged in perilous occupations, where the opportunities for the manifestation of the heroic spirit are the most numerous.

Still the figures show that when heroism calls the man with the overalls is prompt to respond.

A SPLENDID DINNER FOR HEARTY EATERS

Short ribs of beef, brown gravy
Plain boiled potato Bread
Sweet dill pickles
Apple pie Cheese
Coffee

Put the ribs to boil in just enough water to cover them. Salt, add two pepper pods, one slice of onion and one laurel leaf. Boil slowly until tender. Take up, wipe dry, lay in a baking pan, sift little flour over them and brown in oven. There will be enough fat in the pan for the gravy. Heat it, stir in one heaping tablespoon of flour and stir well until lumps disappear. Turn into this flour and fat one and one-half cups of cold water and allow to boil five minutes.

Place the ribs on a platter, peel the potatoes which have been boiled with their jackets on, place them around the ribs and send the gravy to the table in a gravy boat.

This dinner will be eaten with a relish by every one in the family.

TENDERS FOR DREDGING

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Dredging, Port Arthur, Ontario," will be received until 4.00 P.M., on Friday, June 13, 1913, for dredging required at Port Arthur, Ont.

Tenders will not be considered unless made on the forms supplied, and signed with the actual signatures of the tenderers.

Combined specification and form of tender can be obtained on application to the Secretary, Department of Public Works, Ottawa. Tenders must include the towing of the plant to and from the work. Dredges and tugs not owned and registered in Canada shall not be employed in the performance of the work contracted for. Contractors must be ready to begin work within thirty days after the date they have been notified of the acceptance of their tender.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, for five per cent (5 p.c.) of the contract price, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,
R. C. DESROCHERS,
Secretary.

OLD-TIME BUFFALO HUNT

Huge Herd Slaughtered to Provide Meat After Being Driven Into Pen

The driving of buffalo is a science with which the modern cowboy or plainsman is unacquainted, according to Mr. Albert Tate, an old-timer of Edmonton. To make plain the methods adopted of buffalo hunting in the old days, Mr. Tate told the story of a great round up which occurred nearly half a century ago.

It was in the winter of 1867-68, that the great drive took place. The country was in the possession of the Indians and buffalo. That winter the buffalo had been reported as decidedly uneasy in their movements, with a strong tendency for more southern pastures. So it was decided to organize a large hunting party to lay up a store of meat and provisions before the buffalo moved into the prairies beyond the Battle and Red Deer rivers. The white men and half breeds conceded to the request of the Indians, who had inferior horses and guns to build a "pound" and drive the buffalo in, and each share up alike.

A pound was accordingly built in a natural hollow or valley, with the walls of young poplar and willow brush, tepee poles and buffalo rugs in a circle on the higher edge, so that the buffalo, when driven in, would be at a disadvantage, should they attempt to leap, being on a lower level.

The entrance was placed in the wall facing the north. A rough line of fence was run for about half a mile or more from each side of the gateway, gradually widening out to the east and west respectively.

These lines were continued by living posts, boys on ponies, with Tate in charge of this squad, and the lines still extending, were made up of young men on good ponies until at last the "wings" were made up of fully armed hunters on fast horses ready to give chase and kill should the buffalo break through the lines.

One or two envied hunters rode out amid the good wishes of all in the camp "to bring the herd home."

Having located the herd, they took their bearings, along their proposed route towards the wings of the pound.

Slowly, very slowly at first, the buffalo were "induced" to go southwards, the drivers keeping up a system of signals with their friends, red and white, nearer the pound, and taking care not to stampede the animals too soon.

At last, after long waiting, came the signal: "They have started," and soon came another message: "They have formed in line; the leaders are off." These signals reached the anxious camp hours and hours before any untoward movement could be noted.

Discreetly, the living wings closed up the rear, out of sight from the now running herd, until at last even the small boys were in the rear of the frantic droves. There was only the open space in front with a solid living wall behind in the distance, and finally the buffalo were in the hollow, surrounded by walls and the gateway closed.

Then came the slaughter, the boys and men shooting right and left into the struggling mass until not one animal young or old remained alive.

The scene of this great hunt, probably the last one of its kind, was near the site of the present town of Hardisty, Alberta.

Women Smokers

It is estimated that the number of women smokers in New York City alone is nearly 100,000, and that they consume 35,000,000 cigarettes a year. The heaviest trade is done in the Fifth Avenue and other fashionable districts. The women of San Francisco have gone still further, some of the smartest of the smart set there, it is said, being devotees of the pipe.

SILK HATS IN CHINA

Republican Congress Decided Question of Dress and Salutation

Ten sessions of the Republican Congress in Pekin were devoted to the question of dress. One whole day was given over to the trying on of hats, and all possible and impossible fashions of men's and women's clothing were displayed and examined. The results of this painstaking investigation may be gathered from the following resume of the laws passed:—

1. All Chinese officials, without any distinction of rank, shall wear European clothing. This shall consist of black walking coat, top hat of Chinese silk, and patent leather shoes. No mention is made of trousers. On ordinary occasions a derby hat may be worn.

2. Non-office-holding persons shall also dress as above on festivals.

3. Those belonging to the military, police and to the judicial and student bodies shall wear the prescribed uniforms.

4. Women shall use European hats, but otherwise retain their customary dress with certain modifications.

The etiquette of greetings was defined as follows:—Ordinary greeting, hat off, bow once; official greeting, hat off, bow three times. Women keep their hats on.

RE-STOCKING THE LAKES

How the Fish Supply of the Northern Waters is Kept up

During the last few years the Ontario Government has planted in the Lakes in the Highlands of Ontario thousands of parent fish for the purpose of increasing the supply in these waters. A special fish car was built a few years ago by the Grand Trunk Railway for the transportation of these fish. The Provincial Government of Ontario is operating fish hatcheries with very successful results and the season of re-stocking finished with the following results:—74,000 black bass fingerlings were planted in the following waters: Muskoka Lakes, 25,000; Gull Lake, near Gravenhurst, Ont., 3,000; Sturgeon Lake, Cameron Lake and Balsam (Kawartha Lakes), 10,000; Fair Lake, Vernon Lake, Peninsular Lake and Mary Lake (Lake of Bays District), 10,000. Lakes reached by the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, 12,000; and Cache Lake, Algonquin National Park, 6,000. These small fish were transported with great success and without any loss in transit so that they were deposited in the several waters in splendid condition. The black bass grow very quickly and within three years are beyond the prohibited limit in size. This re-stocking has continued for a number of years and the fishing in all these waters is improving annually.

Sanol's Remedies

THE SANOL MFG. CO.,
WINNIPEG.
Jan. 22, 1912.

Dear Sirs,—

It is just one year ago that we put in the first stock of SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES CURE, and we wish to state that we have been amazed at the remarkable sale of these remedies. We have had many repeat orders in both our stores and have sold retail $1000.00 worth of these remedies. In spite of all these sales we have yet to hear of one dissatisfied customer, while many have come back to tell us of the wonderful cures resulting from the Medicine.

Another striking feature of this business is that so many customers come in stating that SANOL has cured Mr.—— their intimate friend, and they wished to try it for themselves.

Wishing you continued success, we are, Yours truly,

A WELL-STOCKED KITCHEN

The most satisfactory way to obtain a worth-while kitchen outfit is to buy a few things at a time. Not only will the expense be spread over a longer period, but each article will be more carefully selected. Aluminum utensils are the best and the most expensive. Graniteware is durable when used with reasonable care—white-lined [illegible] most satisfactory. Graniteware should never be allowed to boil dry nor be scraped when food sticks. In the latter case boil a little washing-soda and water in the dish for a few minutes or soak in warm soapsuds. Tin articles are light to handle and cheap, but rust and discolor, requiring a great deal of scouring. Iron pots and pans are heavy, hard to keep clean, and beyond a thick iron frying pan and an old-fashioned roasting pan, are not necessary.

The following list gives the most necessary appliances for the ordinary kitchen, to which may be added such odd pieces as the housewife finds necessary:

A teakettle
A dish-pan
A frying-pan
A coffee-pot
A teapot
A broiler
A colander
A meat-chopper
A pail
A pastry board
A rolling-pin
3 mixing bowls
A meat-pan
A pudding dish
A bread board
A bread knife
2 and 3 quart pans
2 and 3 quart boilers
A cake tin
3 tins for larger cake
3 bread tins
A can-opener
[illegible]
A corkscrew
A fine wire strainer
A few spoons of different sizes
A few plates, cups & saucers
A cake box
A bread box
Tin boxes or glass jars for flour meat, sugar, coffee, etc.
A scrubbing brush
A sink strainer
A soap shaker
A holder for scouring soap
A whisk for dishwashing
A pin cushion to hang up
A memorandum pad which can be hung up
3 pie plates

MADE A POOR START

Western Lady's Attempt to Promote Trade Relations With France

Though perfectly innocent of any intention of defraud, the wife of a prominent business man in Prince Albert, in her individual endeavor to promote trade relations between France and Canada set the police authorities busy in both countries. It happened in this way. An advertisement appeared in some of the French newspapers offering employment to those who would put up a deposit of $2,000 with the Globe Trotters' agency of Prince Albert. Shortly after its appearance the immigration department was besieged with inquiries and an investigation into the matter was immediately started on both sides of the water. On the face of it, the advertisement seemed to be a gigantic fraud, consequently the energies of the police on both sides of the Atlantic became very active. It was ultimately discovered that the advertisement had been inserted by the wife of a prominent Prince Albert business man.

The lady, quite innocently, had thought of this scheme as the best means to get in touch with some of the French commercial houses, with the idea of promoting French-Canadian trade. She did not want the two thousand dollars for her own purposes but merely wished it put up as a bond of good faith. After getting in touch with the firms her intention was to start the business and then get them to send over travellers to carry on the work when it would be worth their while.

That the name "Globe Trotters" was chosen was an accident. The lady, who is herself French, made an imperfect translation, and she failed to understand the meaning of the expression "globe trotter" as it applies in the English. Satisfied with the explanation the authorities dropped the matter.

FOUND HUMAN BONES

Tragedy of Half a Century Ago Revealed Near Kingston

A sensation was furnished at Sjones Corners, about twenty miles from Kingston, Ont., when workmen found human bones secreted in a cave through which they were making a cut.

Dr. Stewart of that place believed the bones to be those of a girl of about fifteen years of age. Beside the body eight buckles such as a girl would use were found. One of the old residents of the neighborhood called to mind that a young girl was reported missing about forty-five years ago, but could not recall her name. At the time the girl disappeared it was believed she had lost her way in the woods or had been devoured by wolves. The buckles found were of old fashioned style. Dr. Stewart gave it as his opinion that the bones had been in the cave for forty or fifty years.

A Cornwall Mystery

While overseeing the digging up of a street in Cornwall, Ont., to permit of the extension of the water works system, the superintendent, Mr. Charles Lount, left two great iron crowbars standing against the side of the excavation. He crossed the street to look after another section of the work, and when he returned a few minutes later one of the bars had sunk completely out of sight and the other one was only a few inches above the surface.

One of the bars was recovered, but although a depth of four feet was sounded the other could not be found, having gone beyond reach.

Substitute for Bridges

Owing to the great width of the North and South Saskatchewan Rivers, the cost of bridging them is very high, and in order to provide the settlers with access to their markets the Government maintains an ever increasing number of ferries across these streams. There are upwards of forty of these ferries under operation.

LOOKED FOR DIAMONDS

No Stones Found in James Bay Districts but the Gems May be There

Mr. W. A. Muir, a well known prospector, told in Ottawa of an interesting trip he took to the east shore of James Bay in quest of diamonds.

Mr. Muir and his party had many exciting experiences. They paddled 150 miles down the Mattagami river into the Moose river and then down to Moose Factory where they revictualed for the long trip around the southeast shore of the bay.

It was there that their new experiences began. The coast line is very shallow and consists of mud flats extending far out into the bay. Naturally, the canoemen did not care to go very far from shore on account of the great danger of storms. The consequence was that they found the tides a great difficulty. While paddling along on their journey the tide would go down and leave them stranded in the mud. Frequently they had to pack their goods over two miles to shore. On two other occasions while camped, as they thought, high and dry on shore, the tide and a favorable wind working together carried the waters into their camp and swamped them out at midnight.

Mr. Muir prospected along the shores of the East Main river and found large beds of blue clay which is known to the geologists as the diamond matrix. An eminent geologist upon examining the samples brought back and Mr. Muir's report of the country was very favorably impressed.

Regarding the country in the locality of Ungava in which he traveled, Mr. Muir said that it was a disappointment to him. It is not heavily timbered and seems to be almost desolate for he did not see a single sign of game. Mr. Muir saw no white men in the district.

RECALLS ORTH MYSTERY

Servant of Long Missing Archduke [illegible]

The death from a broken heart is reported of the major domo of "Johann Orth," the Austrian Archduke Johann Salvator, who quitted titles, possessions, and honors twenty-two years ago and disappeared after sailing for South America with an operatic singer whom he had married.

Herr Franz Mayerhofer was left in charge of the estates of the archduke when he abandoned his royal rank in 1890. Among the castles possessed by the archduke was one standing on an island of the lake of Gmunden, in Upper Austria. Here valuable art treasures were stored.

The castles and the treasures in them are now to be sold, and the major domo, who cared for every single possession of the archduke with reverent care for so many years, pined away and died on hearing that the treasures were to be scattered.

THE GOLDEN NORTH

Canada's Arctic Region Abounds in Mineral and Animal Wealth

Rev. Father Lefevre, procurator of the missions and industrial schools under the direction of the Sisters of Charity, and located between Fort McMurray and the Arctic Red river, said in the course of an interview at Edmonton, that the north country, on the rim of the Arctic circle, abounds in untold mineral wealth, including gold and copper. He brought samples of coal oil and asphalt from the Mackenzie and Athabasca rivers.

"Gold has been found in the Liard river, where the Hudson's Bay company maintains a trading post," the missionary declared. "Copper outcroppings at Coronation Bay indicate that great stretches of this metal underlie the grass roots. Little or no work has been done in the way of prospecting, but I am satisfied the mineral is there in quantity and quality. It is not difficult of access."

Replying to a question, Father Lefevre was emphatic in his denial that cannibalism is practiced by the Indians in the far north. He said the missionaries living there had never known such a state of affairs, adding: "There are no man-eating Indians in our country."

Father Lefevre told about a large herd of wild buffaloes in the vicinity of Fort Smith, saying also that the northern country is full of black, white, red, cross and silver foxes, otter, marten, lynx, beaver, mink and muskrat, while the streams literally teem with whitefish and trout, the main sustenance of the Indians.

Three months is required to make the trip from Fort McMurray to the Arctic Red River country, including stops of a day or so at the various missions.

RELATED BY BIBLE SELLERS

Queer Things, It Appears, Are Traded for the Books in Many Foreign Lands.

The dangers and humors of the life of the Bible colporters—the men and women agents of the British and Foreign Bible society who sell the Scriptures in the scattered villages of nearly every country in the world—are modestly recorded in the report issued a few days ago, the London Mail states.

In South India last year a colporter caught sight of a tiger crossing his path. In Burma a colporter came face to face with a leopard. In a Peru town a Bible seller was cruelly beaten by fanatical opponents. In the insurrection in Persia a colporter was arrested and charged with being either a spy or an assassin.

On the other hand, the colporters have experiences which relieve the hardships of their tasks. An old woman in France bought a copy because her fancy was struck with the name Nathanael which occurred in a chapter read to her by the seller. She thought the name very pleasing, and decided to propose it for a grandson who was not yet baptized.

Curious bargains are often struck by these Bible sellers. Eggs are a frequent currency. In a Roumanian village a colporter bartered a Bible for a hen. It was a very excellent hen, so he added a New Testament. For four yards of home made linen he disposed of another Bible. Ten eggs and "a lump of bacon" was the price of one Bible in a Hungarian village. In northern Hungary a farmer gave a live pig for a large Bible. A rabbit was an exchange in one Spanish village, and a quantity of preserved peppers and tomatoes in another.

An Arab woman in Fez insisted on giving her silver ring for a Bible, and at a neighboring village a Gospel was exchanged for a pail of water for the colporter's horse. In Korea payment was taken in potatoes. These the colporter traded for rice in a market ten miles away. The rice provided him with food for several days. In another village a man, too poor to pay in coin, bartered a vine, the inner bark of which is used locally in making ropes. In some parts of southern Brazil eggs, fowls, fruit, coffee, cabbage, bread and brick sugar are exchanged for Bibles.

FINE MILITARY POINT

"What are those men doing back there with their hats on?"

This question coming in Toronto Police Court from Chief Inspector Archibald, followed by the orders of two constables to remove their headgear, failed to have the desired result with a corporal and a private of the Royal Canadian Dragoons, who went to the court to get a deserter.

The soldiers shook their heads and remained with their hats on till one of the constables went over to them.

"We are a military escort," explained the corporal.

"That makes no difference. You've got to take off your hats."

"We'll go out," and the two marched out.

When the case was called they went in again with their hats on, took away the deserter, and nothing was said.

Col. Grasett, Toronto's Chief Constable, was of the opinion that the soldiers should have removed their hats.

"The civil law over-rules the military law," was the Chief's explanation. "And even if the military law says a man should keep his hat on, while on duty, I don't think they should stand on a little piece of military etiquette like that."

On several occasions Col. Denison, the magistrate, has ordered escorts of the same kind to remove their hats, and they have done so.

"A soldier on duty is never supposed to remove his hat," said another military man whose opinion was asked.

NEW COFFEE PERCOLATOR

Bag on Standard Holds Pulverized Coffee Suspended

A new way to percolate coffee has been discovered by an Englishman. The device is quite simple, comprising a goose-neck standard of aluminum, a circular stand of the same metal, into which the standard screws, and a cotton bag, which holds the ground coffee and which is fastened to the goose-neck by drawing strings. Place the requisite amount of coffee in the bag, stand the device in an ordinary pot and pour in about three inches of water—hot or cold. When the water boils it will bubble up around the pulverized coffee and acquire the full flavor without getting that strong, rank taste that is the result of grounds standing in the bottom of the pot. The water also rises in the goose-neck tube and circulates freely through that from bottom to top, a flange on the tube preventing the bag from being pushed off.

Beech Tree Not Lightning Proof

Exhaustive investigation of lightning strokes throughout the country disposes of the belief of the ancient philosophers that certain kinds of trees, the laurel, aspen, and beech, were never struck by lightning. Scientists declare that any kind of tree is likely to be struck.

The Champion Dude

M. le Bargy, a Parisian matinee idol, said to be the best dressed man in France, asserts that he spends a minimum of $6,000 a year on his wardrobe. As clothing is supposed to be only about half as expensive in Europe as on this side of the Atlantic, M. le Bargy's clothing expenditure is equivalent to about $10,000 in Canada.

Celery and lettuce and other salad plants, eaten raw, must be washed with especial care. They should be searched with particular care, leaf by leaf, for insects, washed in several waters and then wiped dry with a clean cloth and put in a cold place to become crisp. Otherwise these vegetables are not worth eating.

County Council.

The Peterborough County Council will meet on Tuesday, June 17th and will in all probability remain in session for the remainder of the week. Considerable business of importance awaits the consideration of the Council and a busy session is predicted.

More Immigrants Coming.

Immigration Agent Miller expects a large party out from the old country sometime this week, and will probably help to lessen the demand for help considerably. Three large immigration companies are sending out several parties during the next few weeks.

Stores to Have Half Day.

By an almost unanimous resolution, the retail merchants of the city will close their stores every Thursday afternoon, during the months of July and August. It is felt that all the merchants will join the majority and observe the half holiday.

A Saturday Drunk.

At Saturday's police court Robt. Roberts was charged with having been drunk. He was working at the cemetery on Friday, when the rain poured down. He took homeopathic treatment and took too much liquid internally to counteract the effects of the wet outside—$2.

St. Luke's Bell Silent.

Yesterday the familiar sound of St. Luke's church bell did not ring out its summons to the worshippers of that congregation. The old bell has been taken down and will not be replaced by the new and larger one until the first Sunday in July, when the 37th anniversary of the church will be marked by special services.

Left House of Refuge.

Bertha Reid, twenty years of age, with fair hair, odd-looking, and not very well dressed fled from the House of Refuge, Lakefield, where she has been confined and they are at a loss to locate her. Mr. H. Beavis, the Superintendent of the House of Refuge, asked Chief Thompson to keep a lookout for her. She is a well-known character in this city.

Mrs. G. W. Rubidge's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Mrs. George W. Rubidge was held on Saturday afternoon from the residence of Mr. George Gladman, Dickson street, to St. John's church and thence to Little Lake cemetery. The rector, Rev. Canon Davidson, officiated. At yesterday morning's service in St. John's, the rector made a eulogistic and touching reference to the late Mrs. Rubidge.

The Children's Shelter.

There are only seven children in the Shelter at present. Complaints are continually coming into the Children's Aid Society concerning the condition of children in Apsley, and around the Northern country, and investigations are being made. The public are reminded that the only substance of the Shelter is from subscriptions and gifts from donors, mostly in Peterborough.

Former Local Man Hurt.

The many friends of Mr. Norman Clarke, formerly of this city, but now a resident of Hamilton, will regret to learn that he met with a peculiar and distressing accident. As Mr. Clarke was using an indelible pencil in his office, a few days ago, the point of the pencil breaking off, flew into one of his eyes. He was at once taken to an eye specialist. It is not yet known whether the sight of his injured eye will be saved.

War Against Caterpillars.

On Saturday evening a local citizen living at the northern part of George street, realized that there are far too many caterpillars in Peterborough. Incidentally, it might be noted that the George street man had met several friends and had both dispensed and received liquid refreshments. At 7.45, he was heard to say: "These bugs must be killed off." He was seen carefully wrapping fly paper round the base of a 50 foot telephone pole.

Lindsay Soldiers Helped.

Col. Hopkins, of Lindsay, asked Victoria County Council to assist the 45th Regiment financially. He said the regiment was financially very deficient and it took a great deal of money to run it successfully. As this was a strictly county affair, he had come to them for aid. There were only two of the eight companies from Lindsay, while the others were from different parts of Victoria. Were they to ask for a grant of the same amount per man as were being paid by some of the counties, he would want about $900, but he was not going to ask for anything like that amount. The Regiment was given a grant of $250

A Freak Conveyance.

At 1.45 p.m. Saturday, a horse and buggy passed the White House on Charlotte street. Even in this age of joy-waggons, this is not unusual. Still, that horse and buggy were worth a passing notice. The horse was a freak. Its north or head end was big enough for Barnum's Jumbo, whilst its southern extremity showed evident signs of tuberculosis. The buggy was a contraption of the vintage of Adam in the garden of Eden. The tires were evidently made by hand by Tubal Cain. As this ancient outfit passed the White House, a newspaper, loose in the street, and stirred up by a passing zephyr scared the steed. Bucephalus woke up and started for South Africa or some distant point at express speed. Before the ancient steed succumbed to exhaustion, it was controlled at George street, with no loss.

Is Your Back Full of Aches All Day Long?

THAT STAB-LIKE PAIN IN THE BACK IS SURE INDICATION OF KIDNEY TROUBLE.

Mrs. Anna Rodriguez writes as follows from her home in Valencia:—"For a long time I suffered with failing strength and nagging headaches. My condition grew steadily worse, my limbs become bloated and shaky. I was sallow and thin, felt rheumatic pains, dizziness and chills. I unfortunately didn't suspect my kidneys and was nearly dead when I discovered the true cause of my sufferings. I read so much about the wonderful health and strength that comes to all who use Dr. Hamilton's Pills that I felt sure they would help me. Such blessings of health and comfort I got from Dr. Hamilton's Pills I can't describe. They speedily put me right, and their steady use keeps me active, energetic, strong and happy. I strongly urge others to regulate and tone their system with Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut."

No greater medicine exists than Dr. Hamilton's Pills for the cure of indigestion, constipation, flatulence liver, bladder and kidney trouble. Refuse substitutes. 25c. per box or five boxes for $1.00, at all druggists and storekeepers, or postpaid by the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Rev. Mr. Couch, of the George street church, left Saturday morning for Whitby, where the Methodist conference is in session. Mr. Couch preached in the conference church last night to the conference assembled.

REGISTRATION CARD TO PREVENT LOAFING

With the object of preventing or at least checking the spread of idleness and loafing a plan has been suggested by Rev. Father Minehan of Toronto to have a registration system. Father Minehan's plan would require every man over eighteen years of age to have a card similar to the card of identification nearly always issued by accident insurance companies to those they insure, setting forth the holder's name, address, employment, and the place where he works.

This, Father Minehan thinks, would prevent loafing, and with that obviate a large proportion of crime, as the bulk of it is committed by loafers who "do nothing but hang around and sponge on other people." If this plan were carried out, a policeman finding a man loafing in a park could demand to see his card of registration, and if the man could not produce it he would be liable to arrest as a vagrant. If he claimed to come from some other place, he would be required to show what his business was here.

"This method prevails, I believe," said Father Minehan, "in some European countries."

LOST OVER LONDON

Modern Phase of the Perils of a Great City—Airman Was Mixed

A French aviator, M. Manio, who lost his way while flying from Sittingbourne to Hendon, was observed by thousands of Londoners as he circled above the city endeavoring to get his bearings. He had crossed the channel to Margate and was continuing his flight but found the atmosphere so thick with fog that he became confused and was directly over the city before he realized it. After circling two or three times over the Bank of England, he flew east till he struck the open country and alighted safely.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

THEY FORSEE VOTE ON THE HOME RULE BILL TO-DAY

Liberal Government More Shaky on its Feet Than Ever Before

London, June 9.—When Premier Asquith rose in the House of Commons to move the second reading of the Home Rule Bill the House presented an animated and crowded appearance greatly in contrast with the lethargic condition which had characterized its recent sittings.

The scandals in connection with the Marconi wireless contracts and the ill success of Liberal candidates at the bye-elections had created an uneasy feeling that things were going badly for the Government and strong "calls" had been issued by all the parties in order to secure the unremitting attention of their members so as to insure the Government against the possibility of defeat by a "snap" division.

The verdict against Cecil Chesterton on a charge of criminal libel in connection with the Marconi "deal" on Saturday to some extent rehabilitated the Cabinet Ministers in the eyes of their constituents, and silenced the attacks of the opposition newspapers, but a large section of the radical party is extremely dissatisfied with the lack of frankness on the part of Cabinet Ministers in regard to the Marconi affairs, while some of them consider Premier Asquith too lax in his attendance in Parliament.

TORONTO MAY LEAD CONTINENT IN HOUSING REFORM MOVEMENT

Controller McCarthy Advances Progressive Suggestion for Utilizing Waste Lands--Would Have The City Co-operate With the Housing Company for the Creation of Housing Units

Toronto, June 10.—Toronto will lead the continent in its civic efforts for the solution of the housing problem if a proposal advanced by Controller McCarthy and warmly endorsed by Ald. Anderson is adopted by the City Council. It is that the city shall sell its waste and useless bits of land adjacent to park areas and other suitable localities for the development of housing units as proposed by the Toronto Housing Company, and that the proceeds of the sale should be used by the city for the upkeep and improvement of its park areas.

The Controller and his colleague, in addition to either Ald. May or Ald. McBrien, will represent the city on the board of the Toronto Housing Company. Messrs. McCarthy and Anderson have been giving the whole problem serious consideration for the last few days. The result of the deliberations is that Controller McCarthy, convinced of the propriety and the necessity of heartily endorsing the plans of the company, will at the next meeting of the Parks Committee lay before that body his proposals for the development of the waste lands in the city.

Houses for the Working Man.

It is estimated that there is at least half a million dollars worth of useless land in the city from which the citizens are deriving no benefit. The adoption of Mr. McCarthy's proposals will mean the utilization of the areas for the creation of proper housing facilities for the workingman.

It goes without saying that the small opposition element in Council will oppose any such progressive suggestion, but it is confidently expected that the advanced proposals will meet with enthusiastic endorsation from the Council as a body, and that within a few months Toronto will have embarked upon a policy of housing reform equal to anything in the history of civic endeavour.

GENERAL REVISION OF TARIFF COMING

Next Session of Parliament Will Be Devoted to the Matter.

Ottawa, June 9.—A revision of the general tariff of Canada will be elaborated this summer. Representations are being obtained from recognised representatives of the industries of the Dominion, including the banks and railways. They will be carefully considered when the schedules are dealt with. It is expected that next session will be largely devoted to the tariff. Finance Minister White is leaving for the West within a few days for the purpose of studying industrial conditions of the Prairies and in British Columbia

GEORGE WYNDHAM IS DEAD IN THE CITY PARIS, FRANCE

Did Much to Hasten Establishment of a Peasant Proprietary

London, June 9.—The death of the Right Hon. George Wyndham, who was Chief Secretary for Ireland from 1900 to 1905 in Arthur J. Balfour's Conservative Cabinet, occurred today in Paris, according to private despatches received here. He was in his fiftieth year, and had been Conservative member of Parliament for Dover since 1889.

Rt. Hon. George Wyndham, L.L.D. who was born in London, August 29, 1863, was the eldest son of the Hon. Percy Wyndham, who married a granddaughter of Lord Edward Fitzgerald, the Irish rebel of 1798. Geo. Wyndham is the step-father of the Duke of Westminster, having married the latter's widowed mother, Countess Grosvenor, in 1887. They have one son, Percy, who was married a few months ago to the Hon. Diana Lister, daughter of Lord Ribblesdale.

George Wyndham was an officer in the Coldstream Guards, and took part in the Suakim campaign of 1885. In 1889 he entered the House of Commons. He was Under-Secretary for War 1898-1900 and Chief Secretary for Ireland 1900-1905. His term of office was marked by the passage of an Irish Land Bill which has done much to hasten the establishment of a peasant proprietary.

INTERESTING RECITAL AT THE CONSERVATORY

Last evening a very interesting recital was given in the Conservatory of Music Hall by the violin pupils of Miss Adamson, assisted by Piano pupils of Miss Jean Killmaster, also of the Conservatory Faculty and Mr. Asa Huycke, the popular baritone, who contributed two numbers in his usual artistic manner. There was a large attendance of the parents and friends of the pupils present and at the close Miss Adamson was presented with a bouquet of American Beauties by her pupils.

FIRST OF MILITANT SUFFS IS MARTYR TO THE CAUSE

London, June 9.—Emily Wilding Davison, the first martyr to the militant efforts of women to obtain the suffrage, died Sunday at Epsom Hospital, as the result of a fracture of the skull, sustained in an attempt to stop the King's horse, Anmer, during the running of the Derby on Wednesday last. Only the matron of the hospital and two nurses were present at the death bed, Miss Davison's relatives having left the building when told that there was no hope of her regaining consciousness.

A few moments before her death two comrades draped the screen surrounding the cot with the fateful colors of the Women's Social and Political Union, which she wore when she made her sensational attempt to interfere with the great classic of the British turf.

Miss Davison had evidently expected to gain the track at Tottenham Corner in time to intercept and scatter the field, but was detained a moment by a spectator who tried to restrain her. She reached the track in time to be struck by the King's horse, which was running in the rack. The woman turned a complete somersault, coming down across the legs of Jockey Jones, who had been left prone and unconscious after the fall of his mount. She struck on her head and it was at first thought that her thick hair had saved her, but a later examinasion showed the fracture of the base of the skull and an operation was performed, but the case was hopeless from the beginning.

A Progressive Minister

Postmaster-General Pelletier has fully justified our prognostication, made at the time of his accepting that important port folio. , Hon. Mr. Pelletier, since handling the reins of this leading branch of the civil service has certainly made good. Three striking measures stand to his credit this session. These are: (1) An improvement in the mail service between Canada and Great Britain; (2) a bill providing for a wireless service between this country and the United Kingdom that will under-cut cable rates from one-third to two-thirds; (3) a measure for the creation of a parcels post system for the whole Dominion.

The administration of the Postmaster-General's Department has been characterized by progress, efficiency, with a conservative regard to public expenditure.

MARCONI AFFAIR WRECK ALL FAITH OF LIBERAL VOTERS

Lord Murray, Former Whip and Treasurer of Party Funds Leaves England

London, June 9.—The air is thick with rumors of dramatic developments within the next few days. These rumors concern Lord Murray, who, as chief Liberal whip and the treasurer of the party, engineered the great Liberal victories in 1906 and 1910. On the very day of the first Marconi debate in the Commons, he resigned office on the ground of health, and since has been travelling in remote South America lands as the emissary of a great contracting house, Weetman & Pearson, with whom he is in constant touch.

Evidence before the courts and the Marconi Parliamentary Committee showed weeks ago that he joined his Ministerialist colleagues, Sir Rufus Isaacs and Lloyd George, in the American Marconi deals. Isaacs and Lloyd George came forward and told their sensational tales; Murray preserved a stolid silence, though he can hardly have failed to know something of what was passing in his absence.

$1,000,000 FOR STUDY OF HUSBAND'S ILLNESS

Berkeley, N.C., June 9.—In memory of a husband who for years had suffered from a malady that eluded medical skill, Mrs. George William Hooper of San Francisco has transferred to the University of California $1,000,000 for the establishment of an institute of medical research.

In announcing it at the commencement exercises of the University President Benjamin I. Wheeler said:

"Mr. Hooper knew that he could not be helped, but he hoped that something might be done for others who suffered in the same way. His devoted wife has made possible a realization of his wish in behalf of the sons of men."

GREY ON HOME RULE

Former Governor-General Says It Would Mean Civil War.

London, June 9.—Lord Grey stirs the already troubled Ministerial waters by letters in The Times declaring: "My Canadian experience causes me to realize the present Home Rule Bill, if persisted in, must lead to bloodshed and civil war, for under its provisions Ulster men are robbed of autonomous rights and just shares in the representation in the Imperial Parliament." He favors a federation of the United Kingdom on Canadian lines.

POLICE HAVE ARMED MURDERER AT BAY

Arrest of the Lumberjack Who Shot and Killed Deputy Sheriffs Is Expected Hourly.

Sault Ste Marie, Ont., June 9.—Until noon to-day several posses and all the police of Michigan had been unsuccessful in locating Lumberjack Joe. Tovens, who shot and killed Deputy Sheriffs James Sutton and Alfred Scribner while attempting to arrest him for fatally stabbing an Indian, Joe. Teepius, in a drunken quarrel at Brimley, Michigan, Friday night.

The police at Sault Ste Marie report a fugitive seen at Eckerman, 30 miles from the Soo on the Duluth & South Shore Railroad. He is said to be hiding in a barn, armed, and prepared to defend himself. The posses are closing in and he cannot escape from the district. The arrest is expected hourly, and the police are instructed to take him at any cost.

TRANSCONA MECCA FOR INVESTORS

Progressive Western Town Has a Rosy Outlook—Excellent Opportunities for Investment.

Transcona, June 9.—The remarkable development of Transcona forms an interesting chapter in the history of the Canadian West. It is the initiation of a distinct epoch; the commencement of a new era: the manufacturing and wholesale distributing, industrial and commercial life of Western Canada. Wheat has always been considered the one production of the West till "West" and "Wheat" have become to be regarded as almost synonymous terms. With Transcona and other manufacturing centres springing into existence simultaneously, the Industrial Age commences, not to supersede, but to develop with the great Wheat Age.

Transcona is a name to conjure with. Three years ago its site was a bare prairie; today it is a city. The golden magic that made this possible was wrought by the three great transcontinental railroads which converge here, making it the focus of a perfect distributing system. The district is filling up with work shops and factories. The G.T.P. have most of their shops built and in these they will employ an army of 5,000 men. There shops and terminals will have invested in them six and a half million dollars. The C.P.R. have a $3,000,000 plant and will employ 2,000 men. Their yards when completed will be the greatest in the world, as far as terminal facilities are concerned, having one hundred and five miles of storage. The Grand Trunk Pacific will have the finest equipment in America in their Transcona plant. The Manitoba Bridge and Iron Works are erecting a million dollar plant to employ 1,500 men. The Dominion Tar and Chemical Works. Ely Cartridge Works and others are building. This gives an index of the magnificent

FIERCE ATTACK ON METHODISTS, BY ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH

Peterborough Church Paper Publishes Statement Which is Regarded as Develish in the Eyes of Methodist Minister

The Times has been requested to publish the following, which speaks for itself'

Recently there has appeared in the town of Cochrane, a publication entitled The Home Messenger, a Catholic magazine for the Parish of Cochrane, 1913. It is marked "Annual Edition," and "Printed and published from the office of The Home Messenger, Peterborough, Ontario." This publication is distinctly Roman Catholic, and is distributed through the local parish priest, Father Larocque, to the members of his congregation. Some copies are also distributed to Protestants, who have advertised through the medium of The Home Messenger. In this publication there is an article entitled "Methodism To-Day," which is claimed to be a reprint from America, a paper published in New York. One peculiarity with regard to this publication and the article in question, is the fact that the majority of the copies distributed to Protestants advertisers have this article omitted.

The article in question is supposed to contain the statements of the Rev. Ernest Thomas, a clergyman in good standing in the Methodist Church, with regard to Methodist doctrine. Certain deductions are also made from these statements, and Methodism is generally held up to ridicule. A sample of the spirit of the article is revealed in the following words, quoted from its closing paragraph: Yet with the confession of this appalling ignorance of the fundamentals of Christian belief, the Rev. Ernest Thomas flatters himself that he is a Christian minister and will continue to break the bread of doctrine to a wandering and scattered flock. . . . How distressing to think of their numerous following who, through no fault of theirs, are battening on noxious pastures and slaking their thirst at polluted streams."

These conclusion might be in order and justifiable if the Rev. Ernest Thomas said what they state he said, but this is far from being the case. The Rev. Ernest Thomas did not say such things as are put into his mouth by this article. It is a deliberate case of misquoting a man and jungling records to satisfy an end. Concerning this point, the Rev. Ernest Thomas says, "The statements attributed to me are concocted with a cleverness which is develish. In some cases answers are correctly given but the question is changed. In some cases unconnected passages are stuck together."

The appearance of this article in Cochrane is not the beginning of the story. The article came to light some time in the fall of 1912 and from that time until now has been gradually scattered throughout practically the entire Province of Ontario. Its first appearance in Canada was in the parish of Hastings. The matter being brought to the attention of Rev. Ernest Thomas he immediately wrote to Father C. S. Bretherton, parish priest of Hastings, courteously inquiring what he proposed to do in view of the fact that the statements were libellous and defamatory. The priest took no notice of his letter. He then wrote to Bishop R. A. O'Connor, Bishop of Peterborough, telling him that unless action was taken by the priest in Hastings, he would institute proceedings. The Bishop was wiser than his priest and at once replied as follows:

St. Peters Cathedral.
Peterborough, Ont.
Oct. 11. 1912.

Rev. Ernest Thomas.
Indian Head, Sask.

Reverend Sir.—A few days ago I received your letter in reference to the article "Methodism To-day," reprinted in The Home Messenger for the parish of Hastings. At once I wrote to the pastor of Hastings, and enclosed the documents you sent me. In reply he stated that he was unaware of the publication of the article in question until the Messenger was sent to him, and moreover, he had no personal animosity towards yourself. However, to avoid trouble and free you from all blame, he signed the enclosed statement that must prove satisfactory to you and your friends.

With best wishes for your welfare,
I remain, yours truly,
(Sgd.) R. A. O'Connor,
Bishop of Peterborough.

With this letter from the Bishop of Peterborough was forwarded the following retraction by the parish priest of Hastings'

Church of Our Lady of Mt Carmel,
Hastings, Ont., Oct. 10, 1912.

Rev. E. Thomas,
Indian Head, Sask.

The Home Messenger published an article entitled "Methodism To-day," containing serious reflections upon the teachings and views of Rev. Ernest Thomas, and attributing to him statements that he deems erroneous. This article was copied from the "American Review," and signed by P. Spillane, S.J., without our knowledge, and accepted as printed in the parish Messenger sent to us in good faith, but on the Rev. Ernest Thomas calling our attention to it, and comparing it with the court proceedings we find that the Rev. Ernest Thomas is completely misrepresented that the statements made by him do not bear the interpretation given them, and that the attitude ascribed to him was not assumed by him. We therefore regret that such article appeared in The Home Messenger.

Yours,
C. S. Bretherton, Pastor.

It will be noted that this apology and retraction was dated October 10, 1912, whilst The Home Messenger for the parish of Cochrane is dated 1913. In October, 1912, it is admitted that the article in question is entirely fallacious and unjustifiable, and yet they continue to print and scatter it broadcast through the country. This surely is heaping insult upon insult, injury upon injury. They know to-day upon their own admission that the article is false, and yet, for some reason, one questions why, they continue its publication.

Much more might be said with regard to the matter, but the case is already made quite clear. Surely the time has fully arrived and is already past when Protestants should arise in their might, and by the legal means at their disposal, compel these parties responsible for such deliberate persecution to abide by the law of the land, and, in so far as it be possible, rectify the evil already done.

GIRL SHOOTS MAN AS HE RIDES PASTCHER

Stringer, Okla., June 9. — Miss Lela Hesterly, 20 years old, shot Walter Hickman with a shotgun as he was riding by her home near here on horseback. As Hickman fell to the ground he tried to pull his pistol from his scabbald. Then the girl rushed toward him and shot him again, killing him. She was arrested and placed in jail.

Hickman was arrested recently charged with firing shots into the Hesterly home. He was going to Ardmore to sign a bond to keep the peace when he was killed:

AWAY WITH MIDDLEMAN.

An experiment which to to be made by an organization of Texas farmers to ship vegetables direct to consumers in Chicago will be watched with considerable interest by those who are studying the problems of marketing farm products.

This Texas organization is to ship to Chicago hampers filled with cabbage, cauliflower, carrots, onions, radishes, lettuce, spinach and turnips sufficient, it is estimated, to last a family of five a week, and they will be sold for $1.20, which it is said is from $2 to $3 less than a similar supply of vegetables sell for in Chicago under the existing methods. Onions will be sold at distributing stations at three cents a pound.

OTTAWA SENATORS FIGHT HARD AGAINST DEFEAT

Quite a large number of fans turned out yesterday at Riverside Park when the Petes went up against the Ottawa Senators and defeated them in a ten innings game by the score of 7—6. Stan. Cresswell started the twirling for the Petes, and pitched a fairly good game, but the boys behind him were not up to the mark with their support. Stan was replaced about the middle of the game by Sterling, who finished the game in good style and held the visitors pretty well to the mark

A few errors and wild throws crept in the game, but the boys soon tightened up and at the close of the ninth tied up with the Ottawa aggregation, 6—6. In the tenth Davis Rowan reached the first bag, and stole second, when Hilliard made connections with a long drive which scored the winning run.

Manager Shaughnessy during the game, benched his right fielder and pitcher in the hope of holding the Petes down, but it didn't work out right.

The Typos baseball team and all others interested are requested to keep Thursday evening open for a work out at Riverside Park.

THEY FORSEE VOTE ON THE HOME RULE BILL TO-DAY

Liberal Government More Shaky on its Feet Than Ever Before

London, June 9.—When Premier Asquith rose in the House of Commons to move the second reading of the Home Rule Bill the House presented an animated and crowded appearance greatly in contrast with the lethargic condition which had characterized its recent sittings.

The scandals in connection with the Marconi wireless contracts and the ill success of Liberal candidates at the bye-elections had created an uneasy feeling that things were going badly for the Government and strong "calls" had been issued by all the parties in order to secure the unremitting attention of their members so as to insure the Government against the possibility of defeat by a "snap" division.

The verdict against Cecil Chesterton on a charge of criminal libel in connection with the Marconi "deal" on Saturday to some extent rehabilitated the Cabinet Ministers in the eyes of their constituents, and silenced the attacks of the opposition newspapers, but a large section of the radical party is extremely dissatisfied with the lack of frankness on the part of Cabinet Ministers in regard to the Marconi affairs, while some of them consider Premier Asquith too lax in his attendance in Parliament.

TORONTO MAY LEAD CONTINENT IN HOUSING REFORM MOVEMENT

Controller McCarthy Advances Progressive Suggestion for Utilizing Waste Lands--Would Have The City Co-operate With the Housing Company for the Creation of Housing Units

Toronto, June 10.—Toronto will lead the continent in its civic efforts for the solution of the housing problem if a proposal advanced by Controller McCarthy and warmly endorsed by Ald. Anderson is adopted by the City Council. It is that the city shall sell its waste and useless bits of land adjacent to park areas and other suitable localities for the development of housing units as proposed by the Toronto Housing Company, and that the proceeds of the sale should be used by the city for the upkeep and improvement of its park areas.

The Controller and his colleague, in addition to either Ald. May or Ald. McBrien, will represent the city on the board of the Toronto Housing Company. Messrs. McCarthy and Anderson have been giving the whole problem serious consideration for the last few days. The result of the deliberations is that Controller McCarthy, convinced of the propriety and the necessity of heartily endorsing the plans of the company, will at the next meeting of the Parks Committee lay before that body his proposals for the development of the waste lands in the city.

Houses for the Working Man.

It is estimated that there is at least half a million dollars worth of useless land in the city from which the citizens are deriving no benefit. The adoption of Mr. McCarthy's proposals will mean the utilization of the areas for the creation of proper housing facilities for the workingman.

It goes without saying that the small opposition element in Council will oppose any such progressive suggestion, but it is confidently expected that the advanced proposals will meet with enthusiastic endorsation from the Council as a body, and that within a few months Toronto will have embarked upon a policy of housing reform equal to anything in the history of civic endeavour.

GENERAL REVISION OF TARIFF COMING

Next Session of Parliament Will Be Devoted to the Matter.

Ottawa, June 9.—A revision of the general tariff of Canada will be elaborated this summer. Representations are being obtained from recognized representatives of the industries of the Dominion, including the banks and railways. They will be carefully considered when the schedules are dealt with. It is expected that next session will be largely devoted to the tariff. Finance Minister White is leaving for the West within a few days for the purpose of studying industrial conditions of the Prairies and in British Columbia

GEORGE WYNDHAM IS DEAD IN THE CITY PARIS, FRANCE

Did Much to Hasten Establishment of a Peasant Proprietary

London, June 9.—The death of the Right Hon. George Wyndham, who was Chief Secretary for Ireland from 1900 to 1905 in Arthur J. Balfour's Conservative Cabinet, occurred today in Paris, according to private despatches received here. He was in his fiftieth year, and had been Conservative member of Parliament for Dover since 1889.

Rt. Hon. George Wyndham, L.L.D., who was born in London, August 29, 1863, was the eldest son of the Hon. Percy Wyndham, who married a granddaughter of Lord Edward Fitzgerald, the Irish rebel of 1798. Geo. Wyndham is the step-father of the Duke of Westminster, having married the latter's widowed mother, Countess Grosvenor, in 1889. They have one son, Percy, who was married a few months ago to the Hon. Diana Lister, daughter of Lord Ribblesdale.

George Wyndham was an officer in the Coldstream Guards, and took part in the Suakim campaign of 1885. In 1889 he entered the House of Commons. He was Under-Secretary for War 1898-1900 and Chief Secretary for Ireland 1900-1905. His term of office was marked by the passage of an Irish Land Bill which has done much to hasten the establishment of a peasant proprietary.

INTERESTING RECITAL AT THE CONSERVATORY

Last evening a very interesting recital was given in the Conservatory of Music Hall by the violin pupils of Miss Adamson, assisted by Piano pupils of Miss Jean Killmaster, also of the Conservatory Faculty and Mr. Asa Huycke, the popular baritone, who contributed two numbers in his usual artistic manner. There was a large attendance of the parents and friends of the pupils present and at the close Miss Adamson was presented with a bouquet of American Beauties by her pupils.

FIRST OF MILITANT SUFFS IS MARTYR TO THE CAUSE

London, June 9.—Emily Wilding Davison, the first martyr to the militant efforts of women to obtain the suffrage, died Sunday at Epsom Hospital, as the result of a fracture of the skull, sustained in an attempt to stop the King's horse, Anmer, during the running of the Derby on Wednesday last. Only the matron of the hospital and two nurses were present at the death bed. Miss Davison's relatives having left the building when told that there was no hope of her regaining consciousness.

A few moments before her death two comrades draped the screen surrounding the cot with the fateful colors of the Women's Social and Political Union, which she wore when she made her sensational attempt to interfere with the great classic of the British turf.

Miss Davison had evidently expected to gain the track at Tottenham Corner in time to intercept and scatter the field, but was detained a moment by a spectator who tried to restrain her. She reached the track in time to be struck by the King's horse, which was running in the ruck. The woman turned a complete somersault, coming down across the legs of Jockey Jones, who had been left prone and unconscious after the fall of his mount. She struck on her head and it was at first thought that her thick hair had saved her, but a later examinaeion showed the fracture of the base of the skull and an operation was performed, but the case was hopeless from the beginning.

A Progressive Minister

Postmaster-General Pelletier has fully justified our prognostication, made at the time of his accepting that important port folio. Hon. Mr. Pelletier, since handling the reins of this leading branch of the civil service has certainly made good. Three striking measures stand to his credit this session. These are: (1) An improvement in the mail service between Canada and Great Britain; (2) a bill providing for a wireless service between this country and the United Kingdom that will under-cut cable rates from one-third to two-thirds; (3) a measure for the creation of a parcels post system for the whole Dominion.

The administration of the Postmaster-General's Department has been characterized by progress, efficiency, with a conservative regard to public expenditure

MARCONI AFFAIR WRECK ALL FAITH OF LIBERAL VOTERS

Lord Murray, Former Whip and Treasurer of Party Funds Leaves England

London, June 9.—The air is thick with rumors of dramatic developments within the next few days. These rumors concern Lord Murray, who, as chief Liberal whip and the treasurer of the party, engineered the great Liberal victories in 1906 and 1910. On the very day of the first Marconi debate in the Commons, he resigned office on the ground of health, and since has been travelling in remote South America lands as the emissary of a great contracting house, Weetman & Pearson, with whom he is in constant touch.

Evidence before the courts and the Marconi Parliamentary Committee showed weeks ago that he joined his Ministerialist colleagues, Sir Rufus Isaacs and Lloyd George, in the American Marconi deals. Isaacs and Lloyd George came forward and told their sensational tales; Murray preserved a stolid silence, though he can hardly have failed to know something of what was passing in his absence.

GREY ON HOME RULE

Former Governor General Says It Would Mean Civil War.

London, June 9.—Lord Grey stirs the already troubled Ministerial waters by letters in The Times declaring: "My Canadian experience causes me to realize the present Home Rule Bill, if persisted in, must lead to bloodshed and civil war, for under its provisions Ulster men are robbed of autonomous rights and just shares in the representation in the Imperial Parliament." He favors a federation of the United Kingdom on Canadian lines.

A severe earthquake shock was experienced at Lachute, Que., yesterday. It lasted two minutes, but no serious damage was done.

$1,000,000 FOR STUDY OF HUSBAND'S ILLNESS

Berkeley, N.C., June 9.—In memory of a husband who for years had suffered from a malady that eluded medical skill, Mrs. George William Hooper of San Francisco has transferred to the University of California $1,000,000 for the establishment of an institute of medical research.

In announcing it at the commencement exercises of the University President Benjamin I. Wheeler said:

"Mr. Hooper knew that he could not be helped, but he hoped that something might be done for others who suffered in the same way. His devoted wife has made possible a realization of his wish in behalf of the sons of men."

POLICE HAVE ARMED MURDERER AT BAY

Arrest of the Lumberjack Who Shot and Killed Deputy Sheriffs Is Expected Hourly.

Sault Ste Marie, Ont., June 9.—Until noon to-day several posses and all the police of Michigan had been unsuccessful in locating Lumberjack Jos. Tovens, who shot and killed Deputy Sheriffs James Sutton and Alfred Scribner while attempting to arrest him for fatally stabbing an Indian, Joe. Peppin, in a drunken quarrel at Brimley, Michigan, Friday night.

The police at Sault Ste Marie report a fugitive seen at Eckerman, 30 miles from the Soo on the Duluth & South Shore Railroad. He is said to be hiding in a barn, armed, and prepared to defend himself. The posses are closing in and he cannot escape from the district. The arrest is expected hourly, and the police are instructed to take him at any cost.

TRANSCONA MECCA FOR INVESTORS

Progressive Western Town Has a Rosy Outlook--Excellent Opportunities for Investment.

Transcona, June 9.—The remarkable development of Transcona forms an interesting chapter in the history of the Canadian West. It is the initiation of a distinct epoch, the commencement of a new era: the manufacturing and wholesale distributing, industrial and commercial life of Western Canada. Wheat has always been considered the one production of the West till "West" and "Wheat" have become to be regarded as almost synonymous terms. With Transcona and other manufacturing centres springing into existence simultaneously, the Industrial Age commences, not to supersede, but to develop with the great Wheat Age.

Transcona is a name to conjure with. Three years ago its site was a bare prairie; today it is a city. The golden magic that made this possible was wrought by the three great transcontinental railroads which converge here, making it the focus of a perfect distributing system. The district is filling up with work shops and factories. The G.T.P. have most of their shops built and in these they will employ an army of 5,000 men. These shops and terminals will have invested in them six and a half million dollars. The C.P.R. have a $3,000,000 plant and will employ 2,000 men. Their yards when completed will be the greatest in the world, as far as terminal facilities are concerned, having one hundred and five miles of storage. The Grand Trunk Pacific will have the finest equipment in America in their Transcona plant. The Manitoba Bridge and Iron Works are erecting a million dollar plant to employ 1,500 men. The Dominion Tar and Chemical Works, Ely Cartridge Works and others are building. This gives an index of the magnificent

PRINCE DISAPPOINTS CROWD WHO WAIT IN QUEBEC PARK

Had Been "Advertised" to Lay Wreath at Foot of Queen Victoria Monument--Did Not Do So But Dined at Kent House

Quebec, Que., June 10.—Prince Albert disappointed at least five thousand people who had gathered in Victoria Park, yesterday afternoon to see his royal highness lay a wreath at the foot of Queen Victoria's monument as announced. The prince visited Victoria Park in an automobile, but did not stop at the monument and was seen by only a few of the crowd. The prince and other cadets afterwards took their dinner at Kent House, the old residence of the Duke of Kent.

FIERCE ATTACK ON METHODISTS, BY ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH

Peterborough Church Paper Publishes Statement Which is Regarded as Develish in the Eyes of Methodist Minister

The Times has been requested to publish the following, which speaks for itself:

Recently there has appeared in the town of Cochrane, a publication entitled The Home Messenger, a Catholic magazine for the Parish of Cochrane, 1913. It is marked "Annual Edition," and "Printed and published from the office of The Home Messenger, Peterborough, Ontario. This publication is distinctly Roman Catholic, and is distributed through the local parish priest, Father Larocque, to the members of his congregation. Some copies are also distributed to Protestants, who have advertised through the medium of The Home Messenger. In this publication there is an article entitled "Methodism To-Day," which is claimed to be a reprint from America, a paper published in New York. One peculiarity with regard to this publication and the article in question, is the fact that the majority of the copies distributed to Protestants advertisers have this article omitted.

The article in question is supposed to contain the statements of the Rev. Ernest Thomas, a clergyman in good standing in the Methodist Church, with regard to Methodist doctrine. Certain deductions are also made from these statements, and Methodism is generally held up to ridicule. A sample of the spirit of the article is revealed in the following words, quoted from its closing paragraph: Yet with the confession of this appalling ignorance of the fundamentals of Christian belief, the Rev. Ernest Thomas flatters himself that he is a Christian minister and will continue to break the bread of doctrine to a wandering and scattered flock. . . . How distressing to think of their numerous following who, through no fault of theirs, are battening on noxious pastures and slaking their thirst at polluted streams."

These conclusion might be in order and justifiable if the Rev. Ernest Thomas said what they state he said, but this is far from being the case. The Rev. Ernest Thomas did not say such things as are put into his mouth by this article. It is a deliberate case of misquoting a man and juggling records to satisfy an end. Concerning this point, the Rev. Ernest Thomas says, "The statements attributed to me are concocted with a cleverness which is develish. In some cases answers are correctly given but the question is changed. In some cases unconnected passages are stuck together."

The appearance of this article in Cochrane is not the beginning of the story. The article came to light some time in the fall of 1912 and from that time until now has been gradually scattered throughout practically the entire Province of Ontario. Its first appearance in Canada was in the parish of Hastings. The matter being brought to the attention of Rev. Ernest Thomas he immediately wrote to Father C. S. Bretherton, parish priest of Hastings, courteously inquiring what he proposed to do in view of the fact that the statements were libellous and defamatory. The priest took no notice of his letter. He then wrote to Bishop R. A. O'Connor, Bishop of Peterborough, telling him that unless action was taken by the priest in Hastings, he would institute proceedings. The Bishop was wiser than his priest and at once replied as follows:

St. Peters Cathedral.
Peterborough, Ont.
Oct. 11, 1912

Rev. Ernest Thomas,
Indian Head, Sask.

Reverend Sir,—A few days ago I received your letter in reference to the article "Methodism To-day," reprinted in The Home Messenger for the parish of Hastings. At once I wrote to the pastor of Hastings, and enclosed the documents you sent me. In reply he stated that he was unaware of the publication of the article in question until the Messenger was sent to him, and moreover he had no personal animosity towards yourself. However, to avoid trouble and free you from all blame, he signed the enclosed statement that must prove satisfactory to you and your friends.

With best wishes for your welfare,
I remain, yours truly,
(Sgd.) R. A. O'Connor,
Bishop of Peterborough.

With this letter from the Bishop of Peterborough was forwarded the following retraction by the parish priest of Hastings:

Church of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel,
Hastings, Ont., Oct. 10, 1912.

Rev. E. Thomas,
Indian Head, Sask.

The Home Messenger published an article entitled "Methodism To-day," containing serious reflections upon the teachings and views of Rev. Ernest Thomas, and attributing to him statements that he deems erroneous. This article was copied from the "America" Review, and signed by F. Spillane, S.J. without our knowledge, and accepted as printed in the parish Messenger sent to us in good faith, but on the Rev. Ernest Thomas calling our attention to it, and comparing it with the court proceedings we find that the Rev. Ernest Thomas is completely misrepresented that the statements made by him do not bear the interpretation given them and that the attitude ascribed to him was not assumed by him. We therefore regret that such article appeared in The Home Messenger.

Yours,
C. S. Bretherton, Pastor.

It will be noted that this apology and retraction was dated October 10, 1912, whilst The Home Messenger for the parish of Cochrane is dated 1913. In October, 1912, it is admitted that the article in question is entirely fallacious and unjustifiable, and yet they continue to print and scatter it broadcast through the country. This surely is heaping insult upon insult, injury upon injury. They know to-day upon their own admission that the article is false, and yet, for some reason, one questions why, they continue its publication.

Much more might be said with regard to the matter, but the case is already made quite clear. Surely the time has fully arrived and is already past when Protestants should arise in their might, and by the legal means at their disposal, compel these parties responsible for such deliberate persecution to abide by the law of the land, and in so far as it be possible, rectify the evil already done.

GIRL SHOOTS MAN AS HE RIDES PAST HER

Stringer, Okla., June 9.—Miss Lela Hesterly, 20 years old, shot Walter Hickman with a shotgun as he was riding by her home near here on horseback. As Hickman fell to the ground he tried to pull his pistol from his scabbald. Then the girl rushed toward him and shot him again, killing him. She was arrested and placed in jail.

Hickman was arrested recently charged with firing shots into the Hesterly home. He was going to Ardmore to sign a bond to keep the peace when he was killed.

AWAY WITH MIDDLEMAN.

An experiment which to to be made by an organization of Texas farmers to ship vegetables direct to consumers in Chicago will be watched with considerable interest by those who are studying the problems of marketing farm products.

This Texas organization is to ship to Chicago hampers filled with cabbage, cauliflower, carrots, onions, radishes, lettuce, spinach and turnips sufficient, it is estimated, to last a family of five a week, and they will be sold for $1.20, which it is said is from $2 to $3 less than a similar supply of vegetables sell for in Chicago under the existing methods. Onions will be sold at distributing stations at three cents a pound.

OTTAWA SENATORS FIGHT HARD AGAINST DEFEAT

Quite a large number of fans turned out yesterday at Riverside Park when the Petes went up against the Ottawa Senators and defeated them in a ten innings game by the score of 7—6. Stan. Cresswell started the twirling for the Petes, and pitched a fairly good game, but the boys behind him were not up to the mark with their support. Stan was replaced about the middle of the game by Sterling, who finished the game in good style and held the visitors pretty well to the mark.

A few errors and wild throws crept in the game, but the boys soon tightened up and at the close of the ninth tied up with the Ottawa aggregation, 6—6. In the tenth Davie Rowan reached the first bag, and stole second, when Hilliard made connections with a long drive which scored the winning run.

Manager Shaughnessy during the game benched his right fielder and pitcher in the hope of holding the Petes down, but it didn't work out right.

The Typos baseball team and all others interested are requested to keep Thursday evening open for a work out at Riverside Park.

PINE TAR CORDIAL

Advertisements under above heads, 30 words and under, one insertion, 15c.; 3 insertions, 25c.; 6 insertions, 40c.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 25c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 3c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 25c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaprilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 385 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

THE NORTH AMERICAN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

Is practically a mutual one, with the protection afforded by a guarantee fund upon which interest is paid. While each fund is only $60,000.00, the guarantors are liable for five times this amount; so that the position admirably reflects the best points of stock and mutual companies. The Directorate is composed of both policy holders and guarantors.

A MONKEY GHOST

Terrifying Appearance of Little Creature to Unsuspecting Chinaman

A small monkey which escaped from its quarters in the Medical Building of McGill University, Montreal, managed to fall into a pail of white paint, and having accentuated his ugliness and his wierd appearance to an extent difficult to describe, he appeared ghost-like in the path of a Chinese laundryman. Screaming with terror the Chinaman started down the street at full speed, people rushed to the doors, and in the excitement a fire-alarm was sent in, which brought the engines to the scene. When the hubbub abated, the little animal was recaptured, more frightened, probably, than the Chinaman.

Mayor's Chain of Office

Vancouver has an elaborate chain of office which is worn by the Mayors on special occasions. It was purchased by the city at a cost of two hundred dollars, and consists of five shields representing the great industries of the province—agriculture, mining, timber, fishing and the industrial arts. Suspended from these is a large shield bearing the coat-of-arms of Vancouver, carved and enamelled in colors. The smaller shields measure two and one-half inches by two inches and the larger measures four and one-eighth inches by three inches. The chain wighs two and one-half pounds.

Editor at Fifteen

"The Searchlight," published once every three weeks at Beloit, Wisconsin, has for its editor a fifteen-year-old boy, Louis T. Merrill, a student at the Beloit high school. In addition to his editorial duties, Louis looks after the illustrating, advertising and printing of his paper.

"The Searchlight" is printed by the blue-print process instead of in the usual way of a printing press.

RICH WIRGIN AREA

Coal and Iron in Huge Quantities One of British Columbia's Assets

With the construction of the big bridge over Seymour Narrows, connecting the Campbell River section of Vancouver Island with the mainland of British Columbia, an area of great mineral wealth will be made more accessible. The coal deposits are very extensive; in fact, they are said to be almost inexhaustible. Up near the head of the Quinsam river, an affluent of the Campbell, there is a very extensive deposit of iron ore. What other minerals remain to be discovered in the mountain slopes, which flank this great timbered area, one may surmise, but no one can really speak with certainty; but the coal and iron are of themselves sufficient to support a large industrial community.

As a timber country, the region seems to be unsurpassable. There are tens of thousands of acres upon whose soil the sun's rays have not fallen for centuries, because of the stately canopy of verdure, which the firs, the spruces, the hemlocks and the cedars support with their lofty, columnar trunks. About two million feet of lumber per day is being cut, yet the forest wealth shows no sign of diminution to the casual observer. One of the most important and difficult problems presented for consideration is the use to which the sawed-off acres shall be put. Some of them will, doubtless, be reforested. Much excellent pasturage can be had even where many of the large stumps are left.

Tremendous Traffic on Thorouhfares of Old World Cities

The City of London streets near the Mansion House have the heaviest foot passenger traffic of any in the world—500,000 persons a week day; while the Place de Opera in Paris has the heaviest vehicular traffic—63,000 vehicles a day, as compared with 50,000 a day at the Mansion House corner. The Place de Opera has 450,000 foot passengers a week day.

After these two streets come the Friedrichstrasse in Berlin, with an average of 300,000 foot passengers a day; the Graben, Vienna, with an average of 275,000, and the Vladimski, Prospekt, in St. Petersburg, with an average of 300,000 daily.

Centuries in Building

The four centuries between the Panama Canal's first conception and its completion are by no means a record in the annals of canal construction. The completion in 1893 of the canal across the Isthmus of Corinth was the finish of a scheme for which the first survey was made in the year 600 B.C., when Periander employed Egyptian engineers to carry out the work. Nero actually commenced work along the site of the present canal, but at his death it was abandoned, and the project was not revived until 1882, and this though the total length of the canal is under four miles.

CAUGHT REAL WILD MAN

Demented Creature Had Lived in a Cave for Ten Years

Half-naked, his head and face covered with hair, armed with a club and barking like a fox when approached, Arthur Britton, forty years old, who has been missing from his home for more than ten years, was found recently living in a cave in the Pawling Mountain near Poughkeepsie, N.Y. Britton, because of his wild life, has almost lost the art of speaking. His mind is shattered, but although he is thin he possesses the strength of a giant. Britton's mind became affected while serving in the Philippines during the Spanish-American War. When he returned to Pawling after the war he began to wander in the woods and camp out.

Ten years ago his family lost all trace of him and it was only recently that Britton's brother came to the conclusion that the wild man seen frequently in the neighborhood of Pawling Mountain might be his brother. He started an investigation and located the unfortunate man.

Theories About Rainfall.

While we in this country have been suffering for some years from a lack of rain, some parts of Europe appear, according to statistics, to be getting more rain every year.

Observations at the Observatory of Paris show that from 1804 to 1824 the average yearly rainfall was 502 millimeters (an inch is about 25 millimeters). In the next twenty years the average was 507; then from 1845 to 1872 there was an increase to 536; in the next twenty years it was 563, and in the last nineteen years the average has grown to 584 millimeters—about 23¼ inches.

The commonest theory to account for this is that the smoke and dust rising from a large city favor the condensation of moisture. But this theory runs counter to the experience of London, the smokiest city of Europe, where no such increased rainfall is recorded.

And in some of the mountainous regions of France the increase has been as much as 73 per cent., as compared with thirty years ago.

CENTRAL PARK

Transcona

The best money maker of a money making industrial town. The G. T. P. Shops here have already cost $6,000,000.00 and other industries are rapidly making this town the industrial centre of Western Canada. Thousands of mechanics, tradesmen, clerks, and workmen of all kinds will be employed here as soon as all these industries start operations. Now is the time to invest before values go too high. Central Park offers the best investment in Transcona because :—

Central Park is in the centre of the incorporated Town ; this means that Central Park will have all improvements as soon as any other part of the town

Central Park has electric power right at hand.

The G.T.P. Main Line runs through the South end of Central Park, affording good trackage for manufacturers.

The Town is making arrangements to use the G. T. P. trunk sewer, Central Park is the only subdivided property through which this sewer passes.

Central Park prices are lower than any other Transcona property.

EDITORIAL NOTES

A news item in the Examiner states that a well known scientist wants to dig a shaft to the centre of the earth. This great family journal is willing to help to the extent of holding his hat.

In these days of the hobble skirt, the "comp" who made the typographical error was not far wrong when he set up "Miss Mary Dunning was the hoppy bride."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier tells the country that Canada is unprepared for war. In view of the fact that his party had uninterrupted control of the Government for sixteen years we are tempted to ask who is responsible for the unpreparedness ?

SECRET DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS.

"Every court of justice in the land," said the Lord Chancellor of England, in the divorce case of Scott against Scott, "is open to every subject of the King, and a court has no power to sit otherwise than with open doors"

The case arose in an interesting way, for the proceedings concerning Mt. and Mrs. Scott were held in secret. Mrs. Scott was accused of infidelity, but the court vindicated her reputation. She told her friends of this decision and for doing so the justice of the court adjudged her in contempt. The case was then appealed to the House of Lords, sitting as the highest court of appeals, with the result above mentioned.

As a rule, divorce proceedings are decidedly unfragrant, and there are reasons of public policy which argue against permitting them to become public spectacles. On the other hand, however, there are still more urgent reasons of public policy against such proceedings as have repeatedly been had in the States, where divorce has been granted without any opportunity for the public to know what the guilt was or who was guilty. But there will be no more of that sort of business in England.

REALIZING THEIR ERROR.

Gradually the Liberals are learning that their leaders led them unwisely into a position which shows the Government's strength and the Opposition's weakness. They boasted that they would be able to force the Government to the country. They spent thousands of dollars, probably the "hell-taps" of their old campaign fund, in organizing the ridings, printing and distributing campaign literature, all with a view to an election this year. They and the press led the rank and file to expect an early election, and get ready for it. The Globe thought it clever tactics to argue that there could not possibly be an election before June. Literally the Globe was right, but politically the Globe blundered. The cry of "Wolf, wolf," does not have a good effect, even in politics. The obstruction in the House compelled the Government to introduce and pass closure the result of which will be to render the opposition impotent to drive the Government to the country on this or any issue. The last stage of the Opposition is therefore worse than the first, and the Liberals are just beginning to realize it. Already they are trying to save Sir Wilfrid's reputation by pretending that he was personally opposed to such tactics, but was "hustled" into it by Pugsley and others. There are evidences that this is correct, but the strong, masterful leader should not be "hustled" by insurgents, one of whom is the gentlemen who at the Toronto meeting referred to Mr. Borden as a "weakling."

Old Winter Coughs Now Easily Cured

A New Remedy Now Cures Without the Use of Cough Syrups or Drugs.

Just think of it—you can clear away that hard, racking cough, drive it completely out of the system, make yourself perfectly well by the new breathing cure that employs no medicine at all.

You wonder how ; a very simple, indeed ; you simply breathe in through a Catarrhozone Inhaler rich balsamic essences that heal and soothe away the cough in a few hours' time.

In using Catarrhozone you bathe the lining of the nose and throat with that powerful antiseptic of the Blue Gum Tree of Australia, which is probably the surest cold and cough cure in the world to-day.

Clarence E. Cromwell, writing from Medicine Hat, says: "To cure a sneezing cold in about ten minutes the one thing I know of to do it is Catarrhozone. To relieve an irritated throat quickly, nothing can excel Catarrhozone. It simply eats up a cough or cold of any kind. I know of colds that have hung on for months that Catarrhozone cured quickly. Nearly every man I know carries a Catarrhozone Inhaler with him day and night, and in this country it makes a wonderful protection against all winter ills."

Get the dollar outfit, including the hard rubber inhaler, and medication to last two months; medium size 50c. sample size 25c., at all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

LIFE AS A SCHOOL.

(By Rev. P. A. Conners, Peterborough).

Life here below is but a school,
And in it, too, you'll find this rule,
That as the years shall come and go,
You of the goodwill only know,
As you have willed to see it.

No life is real to him who dreams,
And takes the thing just as it seems,
And never for himself enquires,
From whence the smoke, or where the fires,
But takes all things for granted.

If in this life we would succeed,
Then let us strive some noble deed,
To render those with whom we meet,
In the office, or the street ;
For life is what you make it.

We've only one life to invest,
So let us strive to do our best ;
While time and opportunity's given,
That we at last may meet in Heaven
Eternity is what you make it.

GAINS MOONSHINER WILSON'S CLEMENCY

Washington, June 9.—The plight of three motherless girls working in a Southern cotton mill and needing the help of their father, Marion Cook serving a two-year penitentiary term for illicit distilling in North Carolina, caused President Wilson to-day to remit the $100 fine which was a part of Cook's sentence and which he was unable to pay. Cook was convicted at Asheville, N.C., and as a result of the President's action will be released on June 16.

CINDER PATH.

Ithaca, June 9.—In emphatic language John Paul Jones, Cornell's track captain and holder of the world's amateur record for the mile, declared to-day that his record breaking victory in the intercollegiate meet last Saturday was his last race.

TURF.

Washington Courthouse, Ohio, June 9.—Major Mallow, sometimes called the champion half-mile track pacer of the country, dropped dead of heart failure just after a workout here Tuesday. He had just been driven a mile by his owner, Wert Mallow, when the big gelding fell dead.

Major Mallow had taken a mark of 2·06 on a half-mile track. He was fifteen years old.

YACHTING.

London, June 2.—W. P. Burton, who has been chosen to command the Shamrock IV., Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger for the America's Cup, is one of the best known and most accomplished of England's amateur yachtsmen. He has sailed in over a thousand races during his yachting career, which extends over a period of 30 years. His sailing of the Shamrock IV. will be the first time that an amateur ever has sailed a Lipton challenger for the America's Cup.

RING.

San Francisco, June 9.—The match between Lightweight Champion Willie Ritchie and Joe Rivers of Los Angeles, who were to have fought 20 rounds on July 4, has been definitely declared off by the promoters. The men were unable to come to terms on weight. Ritchie could not do better than 134 at 9 o'clock in the morning and Rivers would not concede more than 134 two hours before the bell.

Ritchie, however, is sure of an opponent on the July date. The three most prominent candidates are Ad. Wolgast, from whom he won the title, Bud Anderson of Oregon, who knocked out Joe Mandot, of New Orleans, and Freddie Welsh, of England, now in Vancouver, B.C., with whom Ritchie fought a 20 round draw several years ago.

ATHLETICS.

Philadelphia, June 9.—Michael C. Murphy, dean of American trainers of athletes, died here of a complication of diseases. He had been practically dying for 15 years. Eight weeks ago his death was hourly expected, but he pulled through and subsequently was able to render a great service in his calling.

When news of Murphy's death was received at the University of Pennsylvania the flags on the university building and fraternity houses were lowered to half-mast. All athletic activities were ordered suspended until after the funeral, which was held yesterday morning at 10 o'clock from St. James Roman Catholic Church in West Philadelphia.

Before he was 25 years old Murphy, whose knowledge of conditioning men had become widely known, became the trainer of John L. Sullivan then the world's champion pugilist. He formed the belief that a man to defeat Sullivan could be found and spent a fruitless year in the search.

Health and Beauty Hints

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN.

Dolly: I know canthrox shampoos will make your head feel good and restore the former gloss and fluff to your hair and the color will then be rich and even. Dissolve a teaspoonful canthrox in a cup hot water and rub briskly as you pour a little at a time on the head. You will be surprised at the wealth of rich, white lather canthrox creates and how quickly it dissolves every particle of dust, dandruff and excess oil. Rinsing leaves the hair and scalp wonderfully sweet and clean, while the hair dries quickly and loses its dull, harsh appearance. You will find that the hair looks better after each shampoo.

Blanch: Your blood troubles are not necessarily serious and I am sure you will find quick relief in kardene. Make a tonic of this by pouring 1 ounce kardene in ½ pint alcohol (do not use whisky), then add ½ cupful sugar and hot water to make a quart. Take a tablespoonful three times a day and your biliousness will disappear and those severe headaches will also vanish. I have often recommended this kardene tonic for impure blood, loss of appetite and strength, and to give to a sallow, pimply skin a healthful color and clearness.

Ruth: You should use a plain spurmax lotion in place of pore clogging powder. This lotion is very beneficial to any skin because it tones the delicate tissues and permits the pores to breathe properly. To prepare, dissolve 4 ounces spurmax in ½ pint witch hazel or hot water, then add 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine. This lotion will not blow off nor spot like powder, nor can it be detected when on, as it really seems part of the skin. The regular use of the spurmax lotion corrects the shiny, sallow lifeless or aged condition of the skin and gives to the complexion that youthfulness so much admired. Its use will rid the skin of tan and freckles.

Ethel: No dear, nothing will change the color of your eyes, but the aching will stop if you put 2 or 3 drops of a crystos in each eye a few times a day and you will be surprised at how bright and sparkling they will be. This tonic is made by dissolving 1 ounce crystos in a pint of cold water, and it can do no possible harm. This crystos tonic quickly relieves the smart and ache of tired muscles and is excellent for granulated lids or to remove foreign particles.

Louise: Some physicians say overfatness is caused by an unnatural amount of nutrition absorbed by certain tissues. The only safe way by which this can be overcome is with the aid of parnotis. You can prepare your own treatment by dissolving 4 ounces parnotis in 1½ pints hot water. The dose is a teaspoonful before each meal. This treatment rarely fails and is devoid of danger or inconvenience. When you have taken off enough fat the lines of the figure will be greatly improved and your general health will be much better.

Mary B.: Those ugly hairs on your face will quickly vanish after an application of a delatone paste, made by mixing delatone with water. This paste should be left on the hairy surface 2 or 3 minutes, then removed and the skin washed. The delatone treatment is simple, effective and quite harmless, but be sure you get delatone.

B. O.: Your eye-lashes will grow beautifully long, silken and curly if a little pyroxin is applied nightly at lash-roots with thumb and forefinger. Rubbing pyroxin on eyebrows will induce them to come in thick and glossy. Be cautious and don't get any pyroxin where no hair is wanted.

Lottie: That faded and "stringy" appearance of your hair will soon disappear if you shampoo occasionally with canthrox (see answer to "Dolly"), then rub some quinzoin tonic into the scalp and hair-roots two or three times each week. The quinzoin tonic corrects all unnatural conditions, such as dandruff, excessive oiliness or extreme dryness, and to faded, brittle, unmanageable hair will give a rich, natural color and soft fluff, so that doing it up will be a delight.

Girlie: I am always glad to repeat a recipe. The wrinkle-remover formula which your friend found absolute in its action is easily and cheaply made at home by mixing 1 ounce of almozoin with ½ pint cold water and adding 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine. Stir and let stand for one day. To remove or prevent wrinkles, apply this vegetable cream-jelly thickly, and leave over night, then wash off and with more of the cream massage thoroughly. I have found nothing to equal almozoin jelly-cream to remove wrinkles and keep them away. It contains no fatty substances which might promote growth of hair. You will also notice by its use not only your wrinkles disappearing but the large pores of the entire face getting much smaller and the skin very soft and velvety.

PERFECT PETRIFIED FROG FOUND HERE

It is generally known that after a heavy rain storm of unusual severity, it is a common thing to find miniature frogs abounding. On Saturday as Mr. Frank Clarke was working in his garden on Mark street, East City, he saw a lot [illegible] frogs hopping about, as a result of the heavy rain on Friday. He noticed that one of the frogs did not try to escape on his approach. He picked this frog up, and to his astonishment found the frog was a complete petrifaction. A close search revealed parts of other little frogs, also petrified lying about. The supposition is that the frogs, in falling, were surrounded by conveying hail stones and petrified. Mr. Clark has mounted the little creature on a breastpin and has it on exhibition in the window of his George street jewellery store.

Canada Sees Millions in Fox Farming

WORTH HIS WEIGHT IN GOLD.—Note the silver tip of the tail. The world record price for a silver-black fox skin is $3,000; live silver-black foxes have sold at $30,000 a pair.

(Technical World Magazine for May.)

At the present price of silver-black fox skins a man possessing a source of supply would become a millionaire in a few years. Here, therefore, is a real legitimate "Wallingford" enterprise which opens a field of industry that seems destined to become one of the best paying businesses on the North American continent. The scheme is nothing more nor less than the raising of silver-black foxes, and it has reached the stage where it may be regarded as an addition to the already long list of occupations.

The scene of this new gamble is now Eastern Canadian and British Columbia, and it beats the mining game for excitement. Fox raising has become a craze; men of wealth are heavily concerned in it, and the little fellows are trailing along hoping for some of the crumbs.

The province of Prince Edward Island, which has long had the name of the "Garden of the Gulf," and has been famous for its oats, has been turned practically into one vast fox ranch, and land in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec is being requisitioned for the new venture. The final object of it all, of course, is to market the pelts, but no one has dared to kill a fox for market in the last two years. The world record price for a silver fox skin is $3000, whereas the last recorded price for live silver foxes was $30,000 a pair.

Aside from the beauty of the silver-black fox fur, its rarity has helped to keep the price up.

A perfect skin has a foundation of jet black, with a sprinkling of hairs on the back and rumps which are silver grey for a portion of the distance between the root and the tip of the hair. The extremity of the tail is always pure white. The brilliancy and sheen of a fine pelt give it a notable richness. In fact, it has been estimated by furriers that if black fox skins were as plentiful as those of the red fox, they would still command from $21 to $100, while red fox skins are quoted in current commercial price lists at $6 to $8 for ordinary specimens, and from $12 to $15 for those if Prince Edward Island. The cost of enough raw skins to make a fur coat may be guessed, when it is stated that the average weight of a healthy animal is only eleven or twelve pounds.

The start of the new industry began in this way: About twenty-five years ago Charles Dalton of Tignish, Prince Edward Island, secured a pair of silver-black foxes that had been captured on the Island and tried to breed them in floored building, but he was not very successful. He gave one of his whelps to Robert Oulton, of Albertan, Prince Edward Island, who began to raise them out of doors in pens about seventy-five feet square. This proved to be the proper method and soon the two men were making a fortune out of the business. The neighbors noticed that Dalton and Oulton were becoming rich, but for a long time they kept the secret of their success in raising foxes, and allowed no one to go near the pens. Their secret could not be concealed always and after a time others began to start fox ranches.

As the science of breeding became established, the tremendous possibilities of fox ranching appealed to the speculative tendencies of the "Islanders," and the industry advanced at a great pace. The island supply of wild foxes was soon exhausted, and the word was passed through the Northern woods that a silver-black fox trapped alive was worth many trapped dead.

At present nearly 1000 foxes are kept in pens on the farms of the island. At least 660 of them are of the genuine silver-black variety. They are not to be slaughtered and the pelts sent to London, which is the great clearing house of the fur trade. They are to be nurtured carefully, awaiting a market from men eager to get into the new game. Dead, their pelts would bring close to $1,000,000. Their value as breeders at the present way things are going is more than $4,500,000.

The silver-black fox in captivity has had the approval of royalty. The Governor-General, the Duke of Connaught, and his daughter, the Princess Patricia, in their tour of Canada last summer, made special visits to ranches owned by Dr. Alexander MacNeill at Summerside, Prince Edward Island. One of Dr. MacNeill's new ranches was formally named St. Patrick by the Princess. Describing his part in the industry, Mr. MacNeill said:

"Three years ago, with two partners, Allen and Saunders, I started to raise silver-black foxes. We bought one pair of young silver-blacks for $4000, but they didn't breed that year. The following year we bought five and a half pairs at from $4000 to $9000 a pair. We raised fifteen young foxes that year and sold them all the way from $5000 to $10,000 a pair. There are from two to eight whelps in a litter, but rarely more than seven.

"We have now in St. Patrick's Ranch fourteen pairs of silver-black foxes. These are of the highest value as breeders. It is really difficult to say just what they are worth. We have two or three pairs that we would not part with for any amount of money, and they are certainly worth at least $30,000 a pair. We would not kill any foxes for their fur while there is such a demand for breeding purposes, and the demand is rapidly increasing in different parts of the world, especially in Russia. We expect that the demand will continue to increase for several years."

Another big ranch in Prince Edward Island is Park Farm Ranch, which has been financed by men whose previous activities were centred in department stores. This ranch now hold about $200,000 worth of silver-black foxes.

The ranch consists of five acres of grove on a hillside overlooking the harbor. A bewildering maze of special fox netting divides the grove into thirty runs or warrens. In the centre of each warren is the breeding kennel, which is constructed on scientific lines that experience has taught is the most advantageous. Provision is made to keep the dog foxes, or males, in separate enclosures at times when their presence would be too disturbing to the growing young.

Nothing that will prevent mishap to the little foxes has been overlooked in building these kennels. Then entrance is by a covered runway from the ground. The interior is divided into two compartments. The outer compartment is the mother fox's sitting room, and the inner her bedroom. The bedroom has a sloping interior roof and a round, high entrance. Inside, the bottom is rounded, like a bowl, with sufficient depth to keep the little foxes from falling out before their eyes are open. The bedroom, usually called the nest, is interlined with pulverized cork to keep out dampness, and is surrounded by air chambers for ventilation.

There is a certain amount of ingenuity in keeping the wily fox safely within an inclosure. The warren inclosures are made by a specially prepared heavy netting and for some distance above the ground and down to the subsoil there is a closer barricade. In building the inclosures, trenches about five feet deep are dug, planks are placed on edge or cement set in, the wire is built perpendicularly from this base, and the surface earth packed in again. When Mr. Fox starts on his burrowing, he goes down as far as the hardpan and finds the resistance of wire all the way along the bounds of his inclosure. He soon discovers that there is no underground way out and thereafter confines his subsurface wandering to the centre of the inclosure.

If a fox should escape from his warren, say at feeding time, when the keeper may carelessly leave the gate open, he will encounter a wire hazard that surrounds the entire ranch, and although this is not carefully constructed as the individual inclosures, it serves to keep the fox busy until his absence is discovered and he is recaptured.

Men all over Canada are figuring on fox profits. Those who haven't foxes figure what would happen if they could only find the price of a pair. Just suppose one did have a pair! In one year, with luck, they they would produce a litter of from three to seven. The second year, by crossbreeding and exchange with other breeders this number would be increased to about twelve. The third year would show thirty-six in his pens and if luck kept up there would be 110 at the end of the fourth year. Five years' breeding and exchange might bring the number up to 330 and six to nearly 1000. Then he would be worth more than $7,000,000 if the present prices were maintained and the quality of the foxes was of the highest.

Foxes breed but once a year and are generally believed to be monogamous. They mate the first season when less than a year old, and may continue to breed until they are ten years old. The care which breeders take to keep the foxes free from outside disturbances in the mating period is the result of costly experience. Once the young have their eyes open, which is from nineteen days to a month after birth, there is not much danger.

The wise fox farmer arranges to leave the foxes very much alone at whelping time. A plentiful supply of food has been put in the pen in advance and he sees to it that no prying persons get within sound. For weeks he is in a state of exquisite expectancy. He may only guess how many foxes, which he may sell later for $10,000 to $30,000 a pair, are in the new litter. When the pups are from four to six weeks old they begin to come out and play, and from a safe post of observation he may attempt to count them and appraise their merits. But he will not succeed very well, for not all of them come out at once. They keep running in and out, with the father constantly on guard, ready to let loose sharp yelps of warning if danger threatens.

After two months the farmer may take the pups from the mother or leave them for the full six months which they will nurse if left alone. The little foxes are easy to wean, taking to bread and milk with all the avidity of a human baby.

HEADACHE POWDERS

Powerful Drugs Disguised Under Technical Names

A bulletin issued by the Chief Analyst of the Inland Revenue Department contains important warnings and recommendations in regard to the sale of headache powders. The report is the result of three hundred analyses, or two tests each of 150 samples of patent or proprietary medicines purchased throughout the Dominion as headache powders. It is the first test since 1905. In some of the patent medicines there is found to be acetanilide, and phenacitin is found in a number of samples, while in a few cases the chief ingredient was found to be aspirin, a drug not scheduled in the patent medicine act. The analyist points out that the drugs used are known to the medical profession by other names than those by which they are known to the public.

"To employ a synonym of technical import only," says Mr. McGill, "is as effectively to disguise the presence of the drug as the omission of the name altogether for most people. I would suggest that a departmental ruling be made so as to make compulsory the employment on the label of the commonly accepted names of drugs."

He also suggests that the name of the patent drug be prominently indicated, instead of being placed in a lot of reading matter, as is often done. In fifteen samples the schedule drug was found in excess without having any declaration on the label and without being stamped, thus coming under the penal sections of the act. Claims to curative powers, coupled with the words "sure," "certain," or "instantaneous," are declared by the analyst to be unwarranted and misleading, constituting misdescription or misbranding. This, he says, should be made punishable under the act. A final recommendation is made against the putting up of these preparations in the form of lozenges and chocolates. It is declared to be a dangerous innovation. "A drug so potent as a heart depressant as acetanilide or phenacitin should not be disguised in lozenge form. It is sufficiently dangerous to warrant every precaution against excessive use."

CANADA'S PULPWOOD

Discussed in a Recent Bulletin of the Forestry Branch

Ever since the Province of Quebec forbade the export of pulpwood cut from Crown lands, considerable interest has been taken in the question as to how the price of pulpwood would be affected. A leading paper trade periodical estimated that the price of pulpwood had advanced one dollar per cord. This is corroborated by the bulletin on pulpwood lately compiled by the Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior. According to this bulletin, the average price of pulpwood in Quebec province during 1911 was higher by ninety-seven cents than during 1910. In Ontario the price actually fell twenty cents per cord, while in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick increases of twenty-nine and twenty-two cents respectively are anounced. A question that is just beginning to come into notice in the Dominion is the utilization of sawmill waste as material for pulpmaking. A very small quantity of such waste is so utilized by three firms which own both sawmills and pulpmills.

CHAPTER I.

The Battery Passes.

Outside, the softness of an April night; the verdure of tree and lawn, the climbing roses, already far advanced in that southern latitude, sweetly silvered in the moonlight. Within the great old house apparently an equal calm.

Yet, neither within nor without was the night absolutely soundless. Far away to the southward the cloudless horizon, easily visible from the slight eminence on which the house stood, was marked by quivering flashes of lurid light. From time to time, the attentive ear might catch the roll, the roar, the reverberation of heavy sound like distant thunder-peals intermingled with sharper detonations. The flashes came from great guns, and the rolling peals were the sound of the cannon, the detonations explosions of the shells. There was the peace of God in the heaven above; there were the passions of men on the earth beneath.

Lights gleamed here and there, shining through the twining rose foliage, from the windows of the old house, which stood far back from the street. From a room on one side of the hall, which opened from the broad pillared portico of Colonial fashion, a hum of voices arose.

A group of women, with nervous hands and anxious faces, working while they talked, were picking lint, tearing linen and cotton for bandages. Their conversation was not the idle chatter of other days. They "told sad stories of the death of kings!" How "Tom" and "Charles" and "Allen" and "Page" and "Burton" had gone down into the Valley of the Shadow of Death, whence they had not come back. How this fort had been hammered yesterday, the other, the day before. How So-and-So's wounds had been ministered to. How Such-a-One's needs had been relieved. How the enemy were drawing closer and closer, and how they were being held back with courage, which, alas! by that time was the courage of despair. And much of their speech was of their own kind, of bereft women and fatherless children. And ever as they talked, the busy fingers flew.

Upstairs from one of the front rooms the light shone dimly through a window partly covered by a half-drawn Venetian blind. One standing at the side of the house and listening would have heard out of the chamber low moanings, muttered words from feverish lips and delirious brain. The meaningless yet awful babble was broken now and again by words of tenderness and anguish. Soft hands were laid on the burning brow of the poor sufferer within, while a mother's eyes dropped tears upon bloodstained bandages and wasted frame.

And now the gentle wind which swept softly through the trees bore a sudden sharper, stranger sound toward the old house in the garden. The tramp of a horse, the creak of wheels, the faint jingling of arms and sabers drew nearer and rose louder. Sudden words of command punctured the night. Here came a battery, without the rattle of drum or the blare of bugles, with no sound but its own galloping it rolled down the street. Lean, gaunt horses were ridden and driven by leaner and gaunter men in dusty, worn, ragged, tattered uniforms. Only the highly polished brass guns—twelve-pounder Napoleons—gleamed bright in the moonlight.

The sewing women came out on the porch and the blind of the window above was lifted and a white-haired woman stood framed in the light.

No, those watchers did not cheer as the battery swept by on its way to the front. For one thing, a soldier lay upstairs dying; for another, they had passed the time when they cheered that tattered flag. Now they wept over it as one weeps as he beholds for the last time the face of a friend who dies. Once they had acclaimed it as the sunrise in the morning, now they watched it silently go inevitably to the sunset of defeat.

The men did not cheer either. They were not past cheering—oh, no! They were made of rougher stuff than the women, and the time would come when, in final action, they would burst forth into that strange, wild yell that struck terror to the hearts of the hearers. They could cheer even in the last ditch, even in the jaws of death—face the end better for their cheering perhaps; but women are more silent in the crisis. They bear and give no tongue.

THE SANOL MFG. CO.,
WINNIPEG.

Jan. 22, 1912.

Dear Sirs.—

It is just one year ago that we put in the first stock of SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES CURE, and we wish to state that we have been amazed at the remarkable sale of these remedies. We have had many repeat orders in both our stores and have sold about $2000.00 worth of these remedies. In spite of all these sales we have yet to hear of one dissatisfied customer, while many have come back to tell us of the wonderful cures resulting from the Medicine.

Another striking feature of this business is that so many customers come in stating that SANOL has cured Mr.—— their intimate friend, and they wished to try it for themselves.

Wishing you continued success, we are, Yours truly,

The officer in command saw the little group of women on the porch. The moonlight shone from the street side and high-lighted them, turning the rusty black of most of the gowns, home-dyed mourning—all that could be come at in those awful days in Richmond—into soft shadows, above which their faces shone angelic. He saw the woman's head in the window, too. He knew who lay upon the bed of death within the chamber. He had helped to bring him back from the front several days before. He bit his lips for a moment and then, ashamed of his emotion, his voice rang harsh. With arm and saber the battery saluted the women and passed on, while from the window of the great drawing-room, opposite the room of the lint-pickers and bandage-tearers, a slender boy stared and stared after the disappearing guns, his eyes full of envy and vexatious tears as he stamped his foot in futile protest and disappointment.

The noise made by the passing cannon soon died away in the distance. Stillness supervened as before; workers whispered together, realizing that some of those passing upon whom they had looked would pass no more, and that they would look upon them never again. Upstairs the moans of the wounded man had died away; the only thing that persisted was the fearful thundering of the distant guns around beleaguered Petersburg. Within the drawing-room, the boy walked up and down restlessly, muttering to himself, evidently nerving himself to desperate resolution.

"I won't do it," he said. "I won't stay here any longer."

He threw up his hands and turned to the portraits that adorned the room, portraits that carried one back through centuries to the days of the first cavalier of the family, who crossed the seas to seek his fortune in a new land, and it was a singular thing that practically every one of them wore a sword.

"You all fought," said the boy passionately, "and I am going to."

The door at the other end was softly opened. The great room was but dimly lighted by candles in sconces on the wall; the great chandelier was not lighted for lack of tapers, but a more brilliant radiance was presently cast over the apartment by the advent of old Martha. She had been the boy's "Mammy" and the boy's father's "Mammy" as well, and no one dared to speculate how much farther into the past she ran back.

"Is dat you, Mars Wilfred?" said the old woman, waddling into the room, both hands extended, bearing two many-branched candlesticks, which she proceeded to deposit upon the handsome mahogany tables with which the long drawing-room was furnished.

"Yes, it is I, Aunt Martha. Did you see Benton's battery go by?"

"Lawd lub you, chile, Ah done seed so many guns an' hosses an' soljahs a-gwine by Ah don't tek no notice ob 'em no mo'. 'Peahs lak dey keep on a-passin' fo'ebah."

"Well, there won't be many more of them pass by," said the boy in a clear accent, but with that soft intonation which would have betrayed his Southern ancestry anywhere, "and before they are all gone, I would like to join one of them myself."

"Why, my po' li'l lamb!" exclaimed Martha, her arms akimbo, "dat Ah done nussed in dese ahms, is you gwine to de fight?"

The boy's demeanor was anything but lamb-like. He made a fierce step toward her.

Did Not Cheer as the Battery Swept By.

"Don't you call me 'lamb' any more," he said, "it's ridiculous and—"

Mammy Martha started back in alarm.

"'Peahs mo' lak a lion 'd be better," she admitted.

"Where's mother?" asked the boy, dismissing the subject as unworthy of argument.

"I reckon she's upstaihs wid Mars Howard, suh. Yo' bruddah—"

"I want to see her right away," continued the boy impetuously.

"Mars Howard he's putty bad dis ebenin'," returned Martha. "Ah bettah go an' tell her dat you want her, but Ah dunno's she'd want to leab him."

"Well, you tell her to come as soon as she can. I'm awfully sorry for Howard, but it's living men that the Confederacy needs most now."

"Yas, suh," returned the old nurse, with a quizzical look out of her black eyes at the slender boy before her. "Dey suah does need men," she continued, and as the youngster took a passionate step toward her, she deftly passed out of the room and closed the door behind her, and he could hear her ponderous footsteps slowly and heavily mounting the steps.

The boy went to the window again and stared into the night. In his preoccupation he did not catch the sound of a gentler footfall upon the stairs, nor did he notice the opening of the door and the silent approach of a woman, the woman with white hair who had stood at the window. The mother of a son dead, a son dying, and a son living. No distinctive thing that in the Confederacy. Almost any mother who had more than one boy could have been justly so characterized. She stopped half-way down the room and looked lovingly and longingly at the slight, graceful figure of her youngest son. Her eyes filled with tears—for the dying or the living or both? Who can say? She went toward him, laid her hand on his shoulder. He turned instantly and at the sight of her tears burst out quickly:

"Howard isn't worse, is he?" for a moment forgetful of all else.

The woman shook her head.

"I am afraid he is. The sound of that passing battery seemed to excite him so. He thought he was at the front again and wanted to get up."

"Poor old Howard!"

"He's quieter now, perhaps—"

"Mother, is there anything I can do for him?"

"No, my son," answered the woman with a sigh, "I don't think there is anything that anybody can do. We can only wait—and hope. He is in God's hands, not ours."

She lifted her face for a moment and saw beyond the room, through the night, and beyond the stars a Presence Divine, to whom thousands of other women in that dying Confederacy made daily, hourly, and momentary prayers. Less exalted, more human, less touched, the boy bowed his head, not without his own prayer, too.

"But you wanted to see me, Wilfred, Martha said," the woman presently began.

"Yes, mother, I—"

The boy stopped and the woman was in no hurry to press him. She divined what was coming and would fain have avoided it all.

"I am thankful there is a lull in the cannonading," she said, listening. "I wonder why it has stopped?"

"It has not stopped," said Wilfred "at least it has gone on all evening."

"I don't hear it now."

"No, but you will—there!"

"Yes, but compared to what it was yesterday—you know how it shook the house—and Howard suffered so through it."

"So did I," said the boy in a low voice [illegible] passion.

"You, my son?"

"Yes, mother, when I hear those guns and know that the fighting is going on, it fairly maddens me—"

But Mrs. Varney hastily interrupted her boy. Woman-like she would thrust from her the decision which she knew would be imposed upon her.

"Yes, yes," she said; "I know how you suffered—we all suffered, we—" She turned away, sat down in a chair beside the table, leaned her head in her hands, and gave way to her emotions. "There has been nothing but suffering, suffering since this awful war began," she murmured.

"Mother," said Wilfred abruptly, "I want to speak to you. You don't like it, of course, but you have just got to listen this time."

Mrs. Varney lifted her head from her hands. Wilfred came nearer to her and dropped on his knees by her side. One hand she laid upon his shoulder, the other on his head. She stared down into his up-turned face.

"I know—I know, my boy—what you want."

"I can't stay here any longer," said the youth; "it is worse than being shot to pieces. I just have to chain myself to the floor whenever I hear a cannon-shot or see a soldier. When can I go?"

The woman stared at him. In him she saw faintly the face of the boy dying upstairs. In him she saw the white face of the boy who lay under the dew, dead at Seven Pines. In him she saw all her kith and kin, who, true to the traditions of that house, had given up their lives for a cause now practically lost. She could not give up her last one. She drew him gently to her, but, boy-like, he disengaged himself and drew away with a shake of his head, not that he loved his mother the less, but honor—as he saw it—the more.

"Why don't you speak?" he whispered at last.

"I don't know what to say to you, Wilfred," faltered his mother, although there was but one thing to say, and she knew that she must say it, yet she was fighting, woman-like, for time.

"I will tell you what to say," said the boy.

"What?"

"Say that you won't mind if I go down to Petersburg and enlist."

"But that would not be true, Wilfred," said his mother, smiling faintly.

"True or not, mother, I can't stay here."

"Oh, Wilfred, Russell has gone, and Howard is going, and now you want to go and get killed."

"I don't want to be killed at all, mother."

"But you are so young, my boy."

"Not younger than Tom Kittredge," answered the boy; "not younger than Ell Stuart or Cousin Steven or hundreds of other boys down there. See, mother—they have called for all over eighteen, weeks ago; the seventeen call may be out any moment; the next one after that takes me. Do you want me to stay here until I am ordered out! I should think not. Where's your pride?"

"My pride? Ah, my son, it is on the battlefield, over at Seven Pines, and upstairs with Howard."

"Well, I don't care, mother," he persisted obstinately. "I love you and all that, you know it—but I can't stand this. I've got to go. I must go."

Mrs. Varney recognised from the ring of determination in the boy's voice that his mind was made up. She could no longer hold him. With or without her consent he would go, and why should she withhold it? Other boys as young as hers had gone and had not come back. Aye there was the rub: she had given one, the other trembled on the verge, and now the last one! Yes, he must go, too—to live or die as God pleased. If they wanted her to sacrifice everything on the altar of her country, she had her own pride, she would do it, as hundreds of other women had done. She rose from her chair and went toward her boy. He was a slender lad of sixteen but was quite as tall as she. As he stood there he looked strangely like his father, thought the woman.

Stared Down Into His Upturned Face.

"Well," she said at last, "I will write to your father and—"

"But," the boy interrupted in great disappointment, "that'll take forever. You never can tell where his brigade is from day to day. I can't wait for you to do that."

"Wilfred," said his mother, "I can't let you go without his consent. You must be patient. I will write the letter at once, and we will send it by a special messenger. You ought to hear by tomorrow."

The boy turned away impatiently and strode toward the door.

"Wilfred," said his mother gently. The tender appeal in her voice checked him. She came over to him and put her arm about his shoulders. "Don't feel bad, my boy, that you have to stay another day with your mother. It may be many days, you know, before—"

"It isn't that," said Wilfred.

"My darling boy—I know it. You want to fight for your country—and I'm proud of you. I want my sons to do their duty. But with your father at the front, one boy dead, and the other wounded, dying—"

She turned away.

"You will write father tonight, won't you?"

"Yes—yes!"

"I'll wait, then, until we have had time to get a reply," said the boy.

"Yes, and then you will go away. I know what your father's answer will be. The last of my boys—Oh, God, my boys!"

CHAPTER II.

A Commission From the President.

The door giving entrance to the hall was opened unceremoniously by the rotund and privileged Martha. She came at an opportune time, relieving the tension between the mother and son. Wilfred was not insensible to his mother's feelings, but he was determined to go to the front. He was glad of the interruption and rather shamefacedly took advantage of it by leaving the room.

"Well, Martha, what is it?" asked Mrs. Varney, striving to regain her composure.

"Deys one ob de men fum de hospiple heah, ma'am."

"Another one?"

"Ah 'clah to goodness, ma'am, dey jes' keeps a-comin' an' a-comin'. 'Peahs like we cain't keep no close fo' ourse'f; de sheets an' tablecloths an' napkins an' eben de young mistess' petticoats, dey all hab to go."

"And we have just sent all the bandages we have," said Mrs. Varney, smiling.

"Den we got to git some mo'. Dey says dey's all used up, an' two mo' trains jes' come in crowded full o' wounded sojahs—an' mos' all ob 'em dreffeul bad!"

"Is Miss Kittridge here yet, Martha?"

"Yas'm, Ah jes' seed her goin' thu de hall into de libr'y."

"Ask her if they have anything to send. Even if it's only a little, let them have it. What they need most is bandages. There are some in Howard's room. [illegible] what you find there. I think what we have left will last long enough to—to—"

"Yas'm," said old Martha, sniffing. "Ah'm a-gwine. Does you want to see de man?"

"Yes, send him in," said Mrs. Varney.

There was a light tap on the door after Martha went out.

"Come in," said the mistress of the house, and there entered to her a battered and dilapidated specimen of young humanity, his arm in a sling. "My poor man!" exclaimed Mrs. Varney. "Sit down."

"Thank you, ma'am."

"Martha," she called to the old woman, who paused at the door on her way to the stairs, "can't you get something to eat and drink for this gentleman?"

"Well, the pantry ain't obahflowin', as you know, Mrs. Varney. But Ah reckon Ah might fin' a glass o' milk ef Ah jes' had to."

"All our wine has gone long ago," said Mrs. Varney to the soldier, "but if a glass of milk—"

"I haven't seen a glass of milk for three years, ma'am," answered the man, smiling; "it would taste like nectar."

"Martha will set it for you in the dining room while you are waiting. What hospital did you come from, by the way?"

"The Winder, ma'am."

"And is it full?"

"They are laying them on blankets on the floor. You can hardly step for wounded men."

"I suppose you need everything?"

"Everything, but especially bandages."

"Have you been over to St. Paul's church? The ladies are working there tonight."

"Yes, ma'am, I've been over there, but they're not working for the hospital; they're making sand-bags for fortifications."

"And where are you from?"

"I'm a Louisiana Tiger, ma'am," answered the man proudly.

"You don't look much like it now," said the woman, smiling.

"No, I guess the lamb is more like me now, but just wait until I get well enough to go to the front again," admitted the soldier cheerfully.

At this moment one of the ladies who had been working in the other room came in carrying a small packet of bandages done up in a coarse brown paper.

"Oh, Miss Kittridge," said Mrs. Varney, "here is the gentleman who—"

Miss Kittridge was a very business-like person.

"This is every scrap we have," she said, handing the soldier the parcel with a little bow. "If you will come back in an hour or two, perhaps we shall have more for you."

"Thank you, ladies, and God bless you. I don't know what our poor fellows in the hospitals would do if it weren't for you."

"Don't forget your milk in the dining room," said Mrs. Varney.

"I'm not likely to, ma'am," returned the soldier, as, in spite of his wounded arm, he bowed gracefully to the women.

In the hall Martha's voice could be heard exclaiming:

"Come right dis way, you po' chile, an' see what Ah's got fo' you in de dinin' room."

"You must be tired to death," said Mrs. Varney to Miss Kittridge, looking at the white face of the other woman. Her brother had been killed a few days before, but the clods had scarcely rattled down upon his coffin before she was energetically at work again—for other women's brothers.

"No, no," she said bravely; "and our tiredness is nothing compared to the weariness of our men. We are going to stay late tonight, Mrs. Varney, if you will let us. There's so many more wounded come in it won't do to stop now. We have found some old linen that will make splendid bandages, and—"

"My dear girl," said the matron, "stay as long as you possibly can. I will see if Martha can't serve you something to eat after a while. I don't believe there is any tea left in the house."

"Bread and butter will be a feast," said Miss Kittridge.

"And I don't believe there is much butter either," smiled the older woman.

"Well, it doesn't matter," said the other. "Is—is your son—is there any change?"

Dizzy Headaches Cured in One Night

If Troubled With Head-Fullness, Ringing Noises, Specks Before the Eyes, the Stomach is at Fault.

Quick Relief and Certain Cure Comes From Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

"I had terrible pains in my head. My appetite faded away, and when I did eat anything it disagreed and made me very sick for hours after each meal. The pains in my stomach and the dizzy headaches I had to endure almost set one wild. Sometimes attacks came on so severely that I had to go to bed. I would feel so worn, depressed and utterly miserable that for hours I wouldn't speak to my family. My system was poisoned with wastes and nothing helped me till I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Without this grand system-cleaning remedy I would still be sick, but each day brought me better health and spirits. I was cured and made strong, ruddy, and healthy, and will always use and recommend Dr. Hamilton's Pills."

—MRS. G. C. CURRAN,
Westport P. O.

Thousands who are in an ailing, low state of health, need nothing else but Dr. Hamilton's Pills. 25c. per box or five boxes for $1.00, at all druggists and storekeepers, or the Catarrhozone Company, Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

No Drop in Milk.

A local milkman, asked by The Times yesterday whether the price for milk here is likely to drop this summer, replied: "Not on your life. Toronto buyers are paying 30 cents a pound to Peterborough farmers for cream. It is all we can do to get enough milk to supply our trade."

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

The war canoe will make its debut this evening at 7.30 from Rye's boathouse.

Those playing in the second round of the tennis tournament are requested to have their games played off by the end of the week.

A Charlotte St. Estate Deal.

Messrs. John W. Butcher, proprietor of the ten cent store and J. W. McDermid druggist, have purchased the property in front of the Peterborough Curling Rink. This property is 114 ft. x 30 ft. and each takes a lot of 47 ft x 30 ft. The Curling Club reserves 20 feet as an approach to the rink. The price named is $8000.

Will Interest Chemong Visitors

Visitors to Chemong Park, and, in fact, those of the public who visit that summer resort, will be pleased to note that Mr. J. A. Jobe, of Bridgenorth, has secured the pavilion and store there, and will furnish groceries and supplies as well as providing dancing music for the pavilion during the coming season.

Released and Re-Sentenced.

The East City youth who stole money, in a purse from the post office, and who was sentenced to three years in the Mimico Industrial School, but released on parole, has again been detected in theft, and has been re-committed to the school at Mimico. It seems that Detective S. H. Newhall traced the theft of a watch from a man in Patterson street, to this boy on good behavior. He will now be detained at Mimico until further date.

County Court To-day.

The June Sitting of the Peterborough County Court opens this morning at ten o'clock. His Honour Judge Huycke will preside. There is a light docket. The following is a list of the cases:

Jury Cases.

Sanderson verses Gillespie; Godfrey verses Edwards.

Non-Jury Cases.

Heard verses Touchburn; Morris verses Ferguson Ltd.; Bishop verses Shaw; Low verses Zacks.

Peeping Tom Pinched.

A Lakefield man was charged with having been disordering. P. C. Bulfied said he saw prisoner peeping into the window of a house on Aylmer street. Prisoner told him he did not know why he peeped, so the officer took him to the station. Prisoner said his home was in Lakefield. $5.75. He was given an hour to raise the money.

Two Glas Did It.

At yesterday's police court, Thomas Dixon was charged with being drunk whilst in charge of horses and, incidentally, passengers. Thomas said he had taken two horns of gin and guessed he was knocked out. He paid $2.50 in fine and costs for each glass of the John de Kyper

The Chemong Road.

The local Automobile League has had men out on the road to Chemong raking off stones and filling up the holes in the roadway. Yesterday a stone crusher was on the road, and nice pentagon, hexogon and any old-angled stones were being placed by the township on the road. Joy riders take notice!

24th Battery Leaves for Camp.

This morning at 8 o'clock the 24th Field Battery leaves per C.P.R. for Petewawa for their annual camp, under command of Major Gerald Halt. The Battery leaves in full strength, with 100 men and horses, and four 18 pound guns. This battery is part of the 10th brigade of which Lieut.-Col. Young is Officer in Command. This Brigade is part of the Canadian Field Artillery.

A Final Recovery.

Yesterday morning as Postmaster Jobe, of Bridgenorth, was driving to the city, he met an up-to-date auto, owned by a local livery, taking a cheesebuyer out to Lindsay, to attend the cheese market there. As the auto approached the watering place, about two miles out, the machinery became ill. First a death rattle was heard in its throat and, then, with a choking sigh, it died. All efforts at resuscitation were unavailing. The cheesebuyer returned to city in Dan Wetung's stage, and took the noon train for Lindsay. After repeated and strenuous efforts, the auto was, later on, revived.

TO MAKE HAIR QUICKLY DISAPPEAR FROM FACE

(Aids to Beauty)

The beauty-detracting superfluous growths of hair on a woman's face can be quickly banished with a paste made by mixing powdered delatone and water and applying to hairy surface for 2 or 3 minutes, then rubbing off. This takes with it every trace of hair and after the skin is washed it will be clear and spotless. This delatone treatment is quite harmless and rarely is more than one application necessary to remove even a stubborn growth.

To beautify eyebrows, rub a little pyroxin on. This makes them grow thick and lustrous. Applying pyroxin at lash-roots with thumb and forefinger causes them to grow long, silky and curly. Use care and don't get any pyroxin where no hair is wanted.

DEATHS AND FUNERALS

Stanley C. Davey.

The many friends in this city of Mr. Stanley C. Davey, learned with regret yesterday of his death at Nicholls Hospital on Sunday. Mr. Davey had undergone an operation for rupture.

He was born 44 years ago in England, but came to Canada when a child, and has resided here continuously since. He was well known in the district.

He has three children, who survive him besides a sorrowing wife.

His father, Mr. John Davey, resides in Port Hope.

The funeral will take place this afternoon at two o'clock to the Little Lake cemetery. The Rev. C. N. Clarry will officiate

Mrs. Richard Clark.

A well known and highly respected resident of North Monaghan passed away yesterday morning in the person of Mrs. Richard Clark, Lot 1, Concession 9. The deceased who was 77 years of age, was born in the township and had lived there all her life. She was a Presbyterian in religion and a member of the Springville Presbyterian church. She is survived by three sons, Messrs. Geo. John D. and Matthew, and one daughter, Mrs. John Brown, all of North Monaghan.

The funeral will take place this afternoon to Fraserville cemetery.

Thomas Clancy.

On Sunday afternoon, Mr. Thomas Clancy passed away at his residence 293 Wescott street, aged 50 years.

He is survived by one sister, Mrs. E. Welsh, and three brothers, John and William of Peterborough, and Sam of Toronto.

The funeral will take place this afternoon to the Sacred Heart church and thence to St. Peter's cemetery for interment.

WEDDING BELLS.

Walker—Duthie.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at St. Paul's manse last Saturday afternoon, when Miss Elizabeth Duthie became the charming bride of Mr. William Walker, both contracting parties belonging to the city.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Robt. Pogue, pastor of St. Paul's church. Miss Bessie Jarvie was bridesmaid, while the groom was assisted by Mr. Adam Smith.

Mr. and Mrs. Walker will reside in Peterborough.

CIRCUS COSTLY PARADE

When the Barnum and Bailey circus comes to Peterborough, Monday, June 23, it will present something different in the way of street pageantry. The equipment is spick and span new and it cost the management upwards of $1,000,000 to devise and build it. The work of constructing the outfit was done in the foreign workshops of the show in England and occupied the greater part of last winter. Several hundred artisans were kept busy day and night.

For the last two years the foreign agents of the show have been gathering novelties for this parade. They overlooked nothing that money could buy, unless it was too big to ship by boat. They invaded savage islands. Their expeditions extended into jungles where white men had never trod before them. They stripped art galleries and ancient. They stopped at nothing. They spared no expense. The fruit of their labors cannot be expressed in words. It is a sight for the eyes.

Naturally enough this parade bears not the slightest resemblance to those of the past. It excels anything before attempted in beauty. It is world-wide in its variety. In novelty it is up to the last tick of the clock. Every strange type of the the human race is found in it. Every animal recently discovered by science is displayed, in an open cage. It is a world's fair on wheels with a thousand wonders in every mile of it. Constantly passing before the eyes are the crude vehicles of savagery, the bowdahs, rickshaws, palanquins and chariots of Oriental despots, carriages of state from rich empires, fanciful floats of bronze and burnished gold, engines of war, grotesque images of the pagan, Italian statuary, mythological spectacles, horse fairs, fairyland carnivals, brass bands, barbarian orchestras, tom-tom players, weird pipers, silver chimes, cathedral organs, siren pipes, fete-day tableaus and mardi-gras pageantry.

scale on which Transcona is being built. And many other concerns about to locate here are huge enterprises.

Transcona is six miles east of Winnipeg. It will be included in the new Water District of Greater Winnipeg. It gets its electric power from the same unlimited source. Transcona will bear the same relation to Winnipeg, "the Chicago of Canada," as South Chicago bears the Great Western American metropolis. Transcona will be the brawn and the sinew of the giant "Prairie City."

Investments in Transcona property reasonably near the centre of the city are as safe and sure as C.P.R. or G. T. P. stocks. In Regina and Strathcona lots rose from $200 or $300 to $10,000 or $15,000 in value in six or eight years. These towns did not have the two greatest railroads in the world constructing immense yards, shops and terminals as Transcona has. When this fact is considered together with the fact that $90,000,000 is expended or under contract in industrial development in this new city, who can have any doubt about the splendid possibilities of Transcona?

Transcona, than which no one could imagine a happier or more appropriate designation, was selected from among five thousand names suggested for this important centre by Mr. H. C. Prior, of the real estate firm of Prior & Hales, whose property in Transcona is across the street from the Grand Trunk Pacific yard and depot site, on the main thoroughfare. Pandora avenue, running into Winnipeg, and is considered the best proposition in Transcona at present. Houses cannot be built quick enough and are generally bought before they are much higher than the foundation. The house-building industry affords a splendid field for investment in the city of Transcona.

That Transcona has a perfect situation, strategically, that Transcona has, in connection with Winnipeg, the cheapest electrical power on the American continent; that Transcona is the heart of the great railroad centre in Canada (The Grand Trunk Transcontinental alone, with the largest and best equipped shops in the world, is sufficient reason to make Transcona a metropolis), are outstanding features that are making this city a mecca for investors.

Rev. W. E. Wilson of Little Current has been chosen as the temperance candidate for the next provincial election.

LOTS OF MOOSE

The Fraser Valley Has an Abundance of Big Game

Mr. John Egger, a well known trapper and homesteader, who made the journey from Tate Cache to Fort George in a dug out, reports that there are 25 moose to the square mile throughout the entire Fraser River Valley. Along the river the banks show innumerable runways which the deer use to get to water. Fort George, Mr. Egger states, is a rapidly growing town with every prospect of becoming the centre of its district. There is a population of 500 or 600 people there at the present time and more are coming in rapidly.

BRITISH MINISTRY ON VERGE OF HOPELESS DISSOLUTION

Marconi Scandal Has Done Its Worst and Only Most Expert Statesmanship Can Save the Day for Asquith Government

London, June 10.—If the Cabinet Ministers' bona fides were involved the British Government could not possibly survive the shock of the latest Marconi development. As it is, it is clear that the utmost statesmanship will be required to keep the party together until the inflated Marconi affair has shrunk to its p(oper dimensions. The extraordinary levity and the want of discretion with which the shrewdest heads of the Ministry acted staggers the business element of the party, while in Liberal circles everywhere one hears the strongest condemnation of the lack of candor which is permitting the Unionist press to make a beautiful balloon out of each successive soap bubble. A clean-breast of the transactions at the beginning would have avoided all this. The complete collapse of the original attack has now been lost sight of, and it is doubtful if, anything the Ministers can do will bring the question back to its position after the Matin case. Matters in the House have became extremely difficult

The humor of the party is on the verge of breaking out in internecine quarrels; and on both the outside and the inside of St. Stephen's there is a feeling of disillusionment. The whole episode forms an extremely striking lesson on the moral and tactical advantages of complete candor in the presence of a potential scandal.

KING WAS A HEAVY LOSER IN DROP IN C. P. R. STOCK

Operations Undertaken Contrary to Banker's Advice--Conference With Queen and Solicitor Follows--Loss OF $100,000

New Yoek, June 10.—A cable to The Tribune from London says:—"Heavy losses suffered by the King in the recent big slump of stock market were the occasion for a prolonged audience which Sir George White, the King's private solicitor, had with the King this morning after Derby Day. The Jueen took part in the conference.

"The King's losses are understood to have resulted from extensive operations in his behalf in Canadian Pacific. Last week that stock declined 14 points in the London market, and the King's loss is stated to be $100,000.

"Lord Revelstoke is the King's private financial akviser, but the operations in Canadian Pacific were undertaken contrary to that banker's advice."

A NEW RIFLE ASSOCIATION FORMED

The new rifle ranges east of the Lift Lock will be open in about two weeks. A local Rifle Association is being organized with a large embership. The Dominion Government will supply ammunition and rifles. Membership in the new association only costs those joining, $1 a year. The ranges will be open every Thursday for those with personal and patriotic ambition to improve their marksmanship. The new range which has been fully described in a former issue, includes some 30 or 40 acres. The extreme range is 900 yards. Behind the targets is a bullet proof embankment that will exclude all danger. There will be seven tagets. A parmanent caretaker will be in charge and no promiscuous shooting will be allowed

NEW DOGMA POSSIBLE

Pope May Proclaim Traditional Assumption of Virgin Mary as a Church Fact.

Milan, June 10.—The Corriere Della Sera's correspondent at the Vatican asserts that there is a probability that Pius X. will proclaim shortly the traditional assumption of the Virgin Mary into heaven as a dogma of the Church. It is said that during the last few days in talking with high ecclesiastics the Pope expressed this intention.

Proclaiming the tradition as a dogma would give it the full sanction of the Church and impose it upon the faithful as one of the fundamental Catholic truths. By doing this the Pope would be exercising one of the highest functions of the Supreme Pontiff and also exercising his infallibility.

A TORONTO GIRL AT KING'S COURT

London, June 10.—Miss Marguerite Robins of Toronto, daughter of Mr. F. B. Robins, was presented at the fourth court of the King and Queen last night.

BOY DROWNED IN THE CREEK

Willie Robinson, 5 Years Old, Wandered Away-Found By Mr. J. Shaughnessy Late Last Night

Yesterday evening about 5 o'clock, little Willie Robinson, 5 years old, son of Mr. George Robinson, who resides just east of the locks bridge wandered away from his home. The little lad strayed down to Meade's creek, near the locks, and it is said fell in and was drowned. Neighbors joined in the search for the little fellow, but could find no trace of him, up till about 10 o'clock last night, when Mr. Jack Shaughnessy found his body, cold in death, in the creek. The body, it is said, must have been in the water since about 5.30.

The sympathy of the entire community will go out to Mr. and Mrs. Robinson in their sad bereavement.

Mr. Robinson is employed at the Carpet Works.

SEWERS ORDERED BY BOARD OF HEALTH

A regular meeting of the local Board of Health was held yesterday. Mr. Chas. Reynolds of Gilchrist street, called for a dewer.

On motion of Ald. Duncan and Dr. McPherson, the committee will recommend Council that the sewer be constructed.

Messrs. Gainey and Wyatt, asked that the sewer be extended from Cricket Place to Douro street. Each promised to make connections.

The recommendation will be made to Council.

"There's a sewer needed on Lafayette avenue," remarked the M.H.O. "Jackson avenue is just as bad."

A sewer for Elias avenue, Princess street, between Park and George streets, Bonacord street, and Cross street, was also approved.

The City Engineer reported that the construction of a sewer on Harvey street, between Antrim and Smith, was not practicable.

Three tenders for hose nozzles, racks and connections for the Queen Mary Hospital were received as follows: F. R. J. McPherson 9190; Adamson & Dobbin $180; Geo. A. Brenton $158. The McPherson tender allowed for extra valves.

Regarding the dry sweeping of the pavements in front of business places on George street, the M.H.O. suggested that the city prepare a by-law preventing the same.

FATE OF ALLEGED MURDERER GIBSON HANGS ON A VISIT

Minister of Justice Notifies Mr. Lennox of Readiness to Take up Case

Toronto, June 10.—Word has been received by T. H. Lennox, K.C., from the Minister of Justice, Ottawa that the latter is now in a position to go fully into the question of a new trial for Charles Gibson. Mr. Lennox will therefore leave for the capital on Thursday night. He will probably be absent from the city for several days, as there are a large number of documents to examine and compare.

In the meantime the response from the public for subscriptions to carry on the defence is hearty and Liberal.

Father More Hopeful.

"We are receiving subscriptions at the rate of about $30 a day," said Mr. Gibson, sr. "One man rang me up and told me he had $25 for me, which he had collected. He declared that if I left the list with him till Saturday he could make it $50. I told him to keep it till Saturday."

Mr. Gibson keeps in close touch with his son, visiting him regularly at the jail. The "death-watch" which was posted the day the death sentence was passed, continues of course, and the young man is anxiously following the progress of the fight for a new trial.

WHERE THE LADY DOCTOR COMES FROM

As a large number of local people are taking treatment from Mrs. Emma Stevenson, the "doctor" who was recently fined here for practising medicine, a few words about this lady may be of interest. This little old woman, if we may be pardoned for using the term, is the picture of health and cheerfulness, with a good showing of silver grey hair and very pleasant features. Her talk is of the business-like tone and to say that she has explicit faith in her wonderful secret herbal remedies is putting it mildly. "I will cure you if you can stand my treatments," she stated to one patient. "They may cause you a little pain at first, but you will be cured," and thus she convinces one that the remedy is worth the taking.

Her home is at Carmel, Ont. Of late, quite a considerable number of Peterborough people have consulted her and profess to have received benefit from her treatment.

OTTAWA CAPTURES GAME, WHITE CAPS WORKED HARD

The fans were out in good numbers yesterday at Riverside Park, and most of them will be a little hoarse this morning from bowling for the Petes, who fell down yesterday against Ottawa, in the second game of the series here. The game was fairly fast throughout, and the boys hit well, but the Petes could not make connections when the chance to score offered itself. The Ottawa team bunched their hits and the luck was with them. The pitchers of both teams put up good ball and were given fair support. The Petes were credited with two errors, while the visitors had three, with eight hits apiece. Umps Halligan showed signs of short-sightedness a couple of times, he evidently looked too long at the bright colors in the grand stand; but we hope he will have the blinkers on to-day which the bright colors of the fair sex in the stand cannot penetrate.

BLOODHOUNDS AND POLICE SEEK A MICHIGAN OUTLAW

Women go Armed About Their Work Through Fear of Murderer--His Capture Certain

Sault Ste Marie, Ont., June 10.—Posses of police have surrounded the fugitive lumberjack, Joe Tovins, in the woods between Wellsburg and Eckerman, Mich. Bloodhounds are being used and the posses are increasing hourly. The whole district is in terror. The fugitive comes from his hiding place, demands food and disappears. It is believed he will resist, probably adding to the fatalities. The story of the chase is elusive, covering miles in a day, but slowly, surely, the pursuers are closing in.

The hounds were taken to Wellers Siding, where the outlaw was last seen yesterday afternoon. Ten deputy marshals who were taken up yesterday on the revenue cutter Vigilant, are patrolling the Soo Shore. It is certain now that he cannot escape, for even women are seen along the country roads by locomotive crews carrying revolvers and guns. The funerals of the victims was held yesterday afternoon. All business places in the village of Brimley were closed.

MILITANT SUFFRAGETTES ARE TO HONOR THEIR COMRADE

To Be Given an Imposing Funeral Procession Across London, Wrapped in Banner

London, June 10.—It has been decided that Miss Emily Wilding Davison, the militant suffragette who died from her injuries received while interfering with the running of the Derby, shall be buried at her home, Longhorsley, Northumberland, on Thursday. The body has been wrapped in a suffragette banner and a suffragette badge has been placed on her coffin. The Women's Social and Political Union is arranging an imposing funeral procession across London, and a memorial service to be held at the headquarters of the militant organization before the body is placed on the train to be sent to Northumberland.

At the weekly meeting of the suffragettes held in London to-day, the women wore mourning. A telegram was read which had been despatched to the King in the following words:

"Constitutional methods of approaching our King having failed, and Miss Emily Wilding Davison having given her life to call attention to the women's passionate demands for the franchise, we ask the King to give serious attention to this appeal of womanhood."

The fines of $5 each inflicted by the police magistrate on Saturday on Mrs. Marienne Hyde, Miss Constance Andrews and Miss Ogilvie, when they were charged with obstruction in connection with their attempt to interrupt the deliberations of the Balkan peace delegates, were paid by an unknown person to-day, and they were liberated from jail

FATHER SHOWS WELLAND COPS WHERE HE BURIED HIS CHILD

Five Hours After Birth. Fully Developed Child Was Interred, He Says

Welland, June 10.—Buried in a sack three feet below the surface in the far corner of an oat field on a farm about three miles south of Welland, Chief of Police Lang and Detective Miller of the Provincial Department, last evening found the body of a fully developed male child, the son of Robert Nugent, a middle aged bachelor, who owns the farm

Nugent, who was placed under arrest a few days ago on a nominal charge of vagrancy, admitted to the authorities that he was the father of the child and that the mother was an Irish immigrant girl who worked for his mother and himself.

He was taken out of jail yesterday afternoon and went with the officers pointing out the spot where he buried the body.

The baby was born about six weeks ago and buried, Nugent admits, about five hours after birth. A post mortem examination was held this morning and an inquest will be held later. Two charges, one of seduction and the other concealment of childbirth, will be laid against Nugent at once. The outcome of the inquest will likely decide whether or not a more serious charge will be laid

TORONTO WOMEN WANT A VICE COMMISSION NAMED

Toronto, June 10.—A delegation of some 40 members of the Toronto Local Council of Women, headed by Mrs. A. E. Huestis, waited on the Board of Control to-day to urge that a comprehensive survey be made of Toronto's social conditions. The visitors presented an imposing array and almost disconcerted Controller Church, who, in the absence of Mayor Hocken, was in the chair. The ladies were instructed to return next Tuesday prepared to recommend as to the personnel of the committee which they would have conduct the survey.

Following is the address read by Mrs. A. E. Huestis:

"There is an overgrowing conviction present in the minds of many men and women that the moral conditions of this city require careful, thoroughgoing and detailed investigation. The Toronto Local Council of Women representing 18 societies, with a membership of 7,000, has unanimously decided to approach your Worship and the members of the City Council of Toronto with an urgent request for the appointment of a Civic Vice Commission, to consist of citizens representing the points of view of the lawyer, the medical man, the university, the church, the business man, labor interests, and of the mothers of the community, on the various and far-reaching aspects of the social evil and allied vice in the city.

Civic Inquiry First.

"While this is not the place to [illegible] necessary to ask for a Provincial Commission with wider powers, we believe it to be desirable that the extent and nature of the problem be first investigated by a civic commission, as has been done in other cities.

"While this is not the place to enter into details with regard to methods of dealing with the subject, we yet venture to suggest that the commission be divided into sub-committees on the lines of similar commissions in other places, so that each sub-committee may be assigned the study and the collection of information regarding a special aspect of the problem."

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Moderate winds; fine [illegible] warmer.

OUR NAVAL EXPERT.

ADMIRAL SIR GEORGE ROSS—"A navy maintained and manned by Canada."

Come Up Where You Belong!

In the human body, "man-power" comes from food.

But the food must be right.

The gray tissue cells of Brain and Nerves are composed principally of water, albumen and Phosphate of Potash. The first two exist in every day food, but phosphate of potash is frequently lacking.

This necessary element is supplied in

GRAPE-NUTS FOOD

Made of choice Wheat and Barley, it contains all the vital mineral salts of these grains, including the Phosphate of Potash so essential for proper nourishment of Brain and Nerves.

Grape-Nuts Food is thoroughly baked digests easily (in about one hour), and thus forms a perfect complement to ordinary food in the dietary of the average person.

Grape-Nuts — more than any other one factor — supplies both body and brain with nourishment up to the standard of Nature's requirements.

If health and the efficiency which comes with it appeal to you, try Grape-Nuts!

Ready to serve direct from the package with cream and sugar — and wonderfully appetizing.

"There's a Reason" for Grape-Nuts

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 75c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 75c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 386 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

HE LEFT HER OUT

Spinsters' Island Is Bought by Dreadful Man Who Maroons One Girl.

By HAROLD CARTER.

"Dear Julia:—

"I am only able to send you a few lines this time because the weekly steamer is at the little dock here and is just getting ready to return to Portland. I arrived here yesterday to join the other girls, and what do you think? Nobody was here but myself. So I am actually marooned upon this tiny island, where we had such a merry party last year. A letter from Agatha has just followed me here and I learn that the island has been bought by a man, and the club will have to find another camping ground. The creature wrote to all the rest of the club individually but left me out. Apparently I am too insignificant a member to be noticed. The man is Richard Barrett about whom I wrote you last year. He was very rude to me when I told him that our club did not allow men on the island, and he has apparently taken his revenge by buying it over our heads. However, I am alone and anticipate a happy week's sketching. I have a lot of provisions waiting on the dock as I write.

"Ever yours,
"Millicent."

"Dearest Julia:—

"Dreadful things have been happening here since I last wrote to you. That Richard Barrett came over from the coast in his motor boat the day after the steamer left. He seemed anxious to be amiable, but I soon put him in his place. Thereupon he told told me that he had bought the island and that I was trespassing upon his property. I only looked at him scornfully, and he shrivelled up. Presently he so far recovered himself as to tell me that he had not written to me about it because he wanted me to be his guest here. I gave him a piece of my mind and I think he has gone for good. At least, I heard his boat chugging back the next morning, and as far as I could see from a safe distance his camp on the opposite side of the island is empty.

"Affectionately,
"Millicent."

"My dear Julia:—

"I don't know if you will ever get this letter, for the most terrible thing has occurred. Richard Barrett came back yesterday and told me that the boat was not going to run any more this season, now that the island is private property. He offered to supply me with provisions as long as I wanted to stay. I told him that I would leave at once if he would kindly place his motor boat at my disposal. Then he said that he would not unless—O, Julia, I hesitate to tell you what he said, but I must set it down to relieve myself. He said that his fee would be a kiss and that he loved me and had always loved me, and that was why he had let me come to the island alone after warning away Agatha and all the other members of the Spinster's club. I boxed his ears. But the situation is very serious. What shall I do? I fear that I shall have to yield to his horrible suggestion or I shall never get away. How I hate men! "Lovingly,

"Millicent.

"P. S. The wretch is back again and has just asked me if I will accept his conditions. Then he suddenly changed and fell down on his knees. He was so abject that I almost pitied him. He is not a bad-looking young man, and of quite a good family. You know the Barretts of Livingston, L. I.? He is one them, and I understand he knows Aunt Mary quite well. You know Aunt Mary never approved of my joining the club and tried to get me to meet Mr. Barrett last spring.

"P. P. S. Do you suppose Aunt Mary can have anything to do with my horrible predicament?—M."

"Darling Julia:—

"What am I to do? My last supply of food is gone and I shall have to accept his proposition or starve. I am going to tell him that I shall accept, and that I shall have a warrant issued for his arrest as soon as I reach Portland. He is not a bit abject now but defiant and insolent. He said I could have a warrant issued on the island and that he would give me an opportunity. I wonder what he meant

"Yours in anguish,
"Millicent.

"P. S. I found some supplies outside my cabin this morning. I left them there. But I see that I am in the monster's power.—M."

"Dear Julia:—

"Yesterday afternoon Mr Barrett came back with a justice of the peace who inquired whether I wanted to take out a warrant. I said I did, and the justice said he would take Mr. Barrett back as a prisoner in his own motor boat, but that I would have to stay here because the boat was private property. Then they both went away, and although Mr. Clay—the justice—looked so stern, I believe he is a friend of Mr Barrett. I ate the supplies. "Affectionately,

"Millicent.

"P. S. I suppose I had better tell you what happened last night. I resolved to appeal to Mr. Barrett's better instincts and went to his cabin. He was sitting outside, looking deeply dejected. When he saw me he fell on his knees again and caught hold of my hands and begged me to forgive him. He said he was crazily in love with me and wasn't responsible. Then he asked me if there would ever be any hope for him. I told him that our club was vowed to celibacy, but that I would withdraw the warrant, and he answered that Mr. Clay would be back from the mainland in an hour or two, ready to take him back a prisoner, and he was glad I was forgiving. Then we both heard Mr. Clay's boat come chugging across the water, and when it landed I saw that there was a woman in it. Mr. Clay came up to us and said that he had brought back his wife to see the island. Julia, who do you suppose she is? Agatha! It seems that they were in love with each other all last summer, and she kept it from us because she was afraid of being expelled from the club. And she told me that I had hopelessly compromised myself by staying on the island with Mr. Barrett and that the only way out of the dilemma would be to marry him. Isn't it dreadful?

Lovingly,
"Millicent.

"P. S. Mr. Clay performed the ceremony by moonlight. When we get back to Long Island you must come and meet Richard at once.—M."

LIST OF LITERARY SHRINES

Those of America by no Means New, When One Calls to Mind the Famous Names.

The editor and his caller, each returning from a different part of the world, were on the subject of literary shrines.

"What would be generally regarded as the ten literary shrines of America?" queried the former.

Well—they began to enumerate them and to jot the names down on a piece of paper, idly—well, there are the Hawthorne and Emerson houses in Concord, the Lowell and Longfellow houses in Cambridge, Poe's cottage in Fordham, Cooper's palace, Otsego Hall at Cooperstown, Bryant's modest residence east of the Berkshires at Cummington, the Ticknor house in Boston—this, principally by reason of its noted visitors, and chief among them Thackeray-Whitman's home in Camden, Irving's at Sunnyside, and—but that makes ten already, without counting Drake's grave in the little burying ground at Hunt's Point, N. Y., which, judging by the letters that appeared with such frequency in the metropolitan papers for decades concerning the disrepair into which the memorial erected above it had fallen, would seem to be one of the most important of all.

Well, that's eleven, anyway, and probably two or three more ought to be added, either in place of some of those already accepted provisionally, or to swell the total to an irreducible minimum of, say, fifteen. We note that there is not one from the south on the list, and we are looking to our southern friends to make good this omission in letters that will flood the editorial desk by each mail every day for a week or so after the publication of this number. Surely the south must have at least one shrine—a purely literary shrine, that is, and not merely a composite literary and political shrine like Monticello, to which we demur in advance. And the west, oh—but there the shrines, while ripening rapidly (we suspect that there will be an active Riley shrine some day at Indianapolis, for example) are a little green as yet to be picked for our present purposes.—From the Bellman.

Such Ignorance.

"Pa, what is a pourparler?"

"What! Have you been studying ornithology for a whole year and don't know what a pourparler is? I'm surprised at you!"

EDITORIAL NOTES

Prepare for another half dollar rise in hard cogl; the Pennsylvania Senate has just passed a bill laying a tax of five cents per ton on anthracite.

These eugenic weddings are all right, but if they once become the vogue consider the various designs in test tubes and microscopes.

June is distinguished as the month in which ragtime and the turkey trot give way to the wedding march and the honeymoon.

Many thoughtful fans have reached the conclusion that what the Peterborough Ball club needs, more than anything else is some recruits from the tribe of Hittites.

Senator Ashurst described a lobbyist he encountered in Washington as the smoothest individual he had ever seen and added: "He could carry a bundle of eels up stairs and not drop a single one." But we are told that there are no lobbyists in Washington.

VISITING THE UNKNOWN

Searching for the remains of a vanished race, Valdemar Stefansson will spend the next three or fours years in Arctic regions. Stefansson startled the world last year with announcement of the blonde Eskimo, and now he is going back to the unexplored area north and east of Beaufort Sea for some record of contemporaries of the stone age man.

Stefansson expects, if he finds Eskimos near the North Pole, that the ends of science will be served by a contribution as to the lifehistory of the world's common grandfather. "It will be a wonderful opportunity to hand down a record of a vanishing race," he says.

The second purpose of Stefansson's expedition is to secure data concerning birds, beasts, land and sea of that portion of the Arctic touching the Beaufort Sea. It is the unknown.

The value of such an expedition cannot be grasped by the ordinary mind. Neither could the ordinary mind grasp the value of an expedition under command of Christopher Columbus.

HON. SAM HUGHES PRAISED

The Toronto Globe has come out in favor of the splendid work being done by Col. the Hon. Sam. Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence. Formerly the Minister of Militia was attacked most bitterly by the chief Liberal organ but now a change has occured when the work of the Minister is recognized. In a recent editorial the Globe says:

"Col. Hughes is on the right track when he talks of building inexpensive drill sheds and armouries in the small towns and making them centres for training. These military gymnasia all over the country would become centres far the winter social life of the young fellows, rivalling the hockey rinks, and would serve to keep the lads out of the saloons. In summer the rifle range should be as convenient as the drill-gym in winter, and all the year round there should be a good drill sergeant and rifle instructot at the call of the company. The essence of the systems of training should be the acquisition of skill with the rifle and a physique that would make a ten mile march, in full kit, exercise rather than punishment.

"The fuss, frills and feathers should be cut out. Under the conditions outlined there would be no need to provide elaborate trappings to attract the youth of the country to the militia.

"That is the Globe's idea of how Canada's citizen soldiers should be drilled. Col. Hughes Col. Hughes is on the right track if he proposes to hold down the amount to be spent on the professional soldier and to devote as much of the militia appropriation as possible to teaching young Canada to march and shoot."

Couldn't Breath Through His Nose Stuffed With Catarrh

Catarrhozone Inhaler the One Means of Relief, and It Cured Quickly

The extraordinary efficacy of Catarrhozone is without parallel. A sneezing cold is cured in ten minutes, a harsh cough is eased in an hour, the most offensive catarrh is thoroughly drawn from the system. In case of asthma and bronchitis the relief and certain cure that comes from the healing balsamic extracts in Catarrhozone is simply wonderful.

"For more than twenty years I suffered with a cough, bronchitis, asthma and nasal catarrh," writes J. F. Fenwick, of Staunton, P.O. "Every attack I had seemed to grow worse and I could hardly breathe on account of an accumulation of phlegm in the nose and throat. One day I tried Catarrhozone and in ten minutes was wonderfully relieved. I could breathe freely and naturally through the nose, and blood spitting was stopped—the phlegm was cleared away and my regular breathing restored. No remedy can do more than Catarrhozone."

There is no remedy so certain and safe as Catarrhozone, but being a good remedy it is imitated. Beware of the substitutor. Large Catarrhozone lasts two months, price $1.00. Smaller sizes 25c and 50c. At all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

WAITS 96 HOURS TO KILL BAND OF WOLVES

Wisconsin Hunter Outstarves, Then Shoots 'Em—Collects $100 and Buys Meal.

La Crosse, Wis., June 10.—Outstarving a band of eleven wolves by lying in watch outside the entrance to their den for four days and four nights, Owen Hughes, of Angelo township, finally had his reward yesterday, when the wolves, driven by hunger, dashed from their refuge and were killed one by one as they emerged. Hughes came to town to-day collected a bounty of $100 and treated himself to the first meal in more than half a week.

Hughes, who is a professional hunter, was almost exhausted as he made his way into town, climbed feebly up the high steps to the court-house and fell into a chair as he presented his proofs to the county clerk.

FRESH AIR; NO DRAFT

Simple Contrivance to Secure Proper Ventilation of a Room

Doctors are always urging better ventilation, and few of them give very good advice as to how to get it. They want the windows in a room to be open sufficiently to admit plenty of fresh air, but they do not very often tell how this can be accomplished without permitting the cold blasts to freeze the occupants of the room.

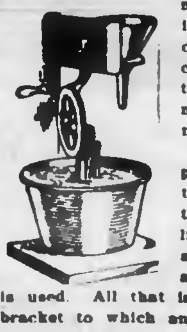
A deflecting board is the proper thing, and it can be made in half an hour and at an expenditure of only a few cents. Two triangular pieces of wood are nailed to a board that is as wide as the window. The triangular pieces are large enough to serve as a stand for the board. The window can be opened until the lower edge of the sash is but a few inches lower than the top of the board.

The board is set on the window sill, and there is no direct current of air from the window, as the board deflects the cold blast.

MAYONNAISE MIXER

Here's a Hint to Housewives Who Want the Best Results

How many hostesses are there who are forced to apologize for the "curdled" or unmixed appearance of their mayonnaise dressing because the oil and the other constituents of the dressing have not been properly mixed?



Yet it is a simple matter to have the proper mixture attained if a little mechanical appliance that anyone can secure is used. All that is necessary is a bracket to which an egg beater can be screwed with a shelf far enough under it to hold the bowl in which the dressing is to be mixed and permit the egg beater to reach the bottom of the bowl.

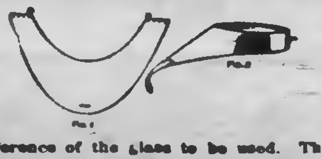
There is a ring on the opposite side of the bracket to which the egg beater is affixed large enough to hold an ordinary funnel. The oil is placed in the funnel and a cork is placed in the small end to regulat the flow to a drop at a time. The other constituents of the dressing are placed in the bowl and the handle of the egg beater is turned. The oil will drop into the dressing in just the proportion desired and the proper mixture is attained. A hammer, a few nails, a piece or two of wood, screws and rugs are all that is needed.

GOGGLES FOR DRIVERS

Easily and Cheaply Made For Use on the Road

Goggles are mighty useful things to have when one does much driving, automobiling or riding on motorcycles. They are expensive when the right sort are bought—but the right kind are not costly if made at home.

Two pieces of heavy leather—just a bit lighter than sole leather—form the basis of a pair. Each piece should be cut the shape shown in the sketch (Fig. 1). The line from A to B should be just ½ inch less than the circumference of the glass to be used. The glass, properly shaped, can be purchased cheaply from any optician.



A notch is cut in the leather on a line with the line A to B to receive the glass, and the ends at A and B are then sewed togther with the glass caught in the notch so as to be shaped when finished, as in Figure 2.

The two pieces are fastened together with a thong or a piece of wire after being fitted to the eye. The head piece to hold the goggles in place is made of silk elastic.

The Ideal Husband

Through the Young Women's Christian Associations, Kansas college girls have enjoyed a symposium on the elements that go to make the model husband. They conclude that he needn't be "handsome," but must be good. The average of physical proportions favored is: Height, 5 feet, 11 inches; chest, 40 inches; waist, 30 inches; weight, 159 pounds. What is included in "goodness," as the Kansas college girls see it, is not smoking or drinking, not sneering at religion, not being impolite, and not being addicted to flattery. Also "he must not recognize a different standard for men and women."

A REVOLVING HOUSE

You Can Regulate Wind and Shade According to Desire

The newest things in summer houses and outdoor sleeping shelters are the revolving kind. These are made easily.

Design the sort of summer house you want, only don't attach it permanently to the foundations. Build a platform of good stout timber on the usual foundations. Fasten a steel rod at least an inch in diameter in the center. The rod can be as long as desired.

Get a dozen or more substantially built steel casters and attach them to the bottom of the house. In the center of the house fasten a block to the floor and pierce the block to receive the steel bolt.

The idea is that the open part of the house can be revolved so as to catch the breeze or avoid it. Also the occupants can get a change of scenery as often as they like.

If the casters are well made and the platform on which they run smoothed properly, the house is easily revolved.

PARIS FOLICE METHODS

Criminal Has Small Chance of Escape Once Trail is Taken

The Parisian police department is the admiration of the world when it really busies itself to obtain information. While it takes some time to set the machinery of justice in motion, once the department gets after a thief it keeps up until somebody is arrested.

A new system of using the bicycle in conjunction with the automobile has recently been developed. A squad of policemen are started out on a chase for a thief in an auto. When they reach a point where the trail divides a man is set on the new trail on a bicycles. Provision is made for carrying bicycles on the rear of the automobile, the hangers adopted having accommodations for as many as three machines.

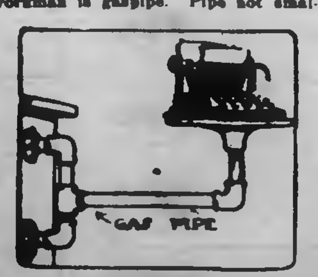
TYPEWRITER STAND MADE OF GAS PIPE

A typewriter is an unsightly thing to have about a room and a typewriter table takes up much space. Therefore a device that will permit the typewriter being provided with a swinging stand that can be attached to a wall or desk or close up against the wall is a real convenience.

Owing to the heaviness of a machine it is necessary to make the stand of good stout material and the very best thing imaginable for the home workman is gaspipe. Pipe not smaller than three-quarter inch should be used. Three three-inch flanges, a T joint and three elbow joints with necessary lengths of pipe and wooden mat for the machine are all that are necessary. The pipe should be screwed into the joints far enough to permit it to turn at least once without weakening the fastening.



The general pattern of the stand is shown in the sketch. The fastening should be done with at least four long, heavy screws to each flange and care should be taken that the screws go into a piece of studding if the stand is fastened to the wall. The entire stand should be painted.

MOTHERS OF CANADA.

(Published by request.)

Mothers of Canada, the name
That stirs our hearts with pride
And adds true lustre to the fame
Of this Dominion wide.

All honour to the brave who fight
For country, kith, and king,
Who battle for the truth and right,
Loud their renown shall ring.

But sweeter, holier glory thiers,
That patient constant throng,
Who by example, precept, prayers,
Resist the tide of wrong.

Land of the lovely maple tree,
Well may the children boast,
That here the flag of liberty
Floats free from coast to coast.

Yet surely every valiant deed,
Our glorious annals show,
Was still come noble mothers' mead
A bright reflected glow.

The dangers, toils of by-gone years
Canadian mothers shared,
Dull, strenuous lot of pioneers,
With fearless courage shared.

They laid upon the solid rock,
A firm foundation sure,
And built a nation strong to walk
In ways of wisdom pure.

A priceless heritage we hold,
Our mothers' proud bequest,
More precious far than gems or gold
Proudly we call them blest.

Fond mothers dried our falling tears,
And soothed our childish woes;
Still ever through life's changing years,
The truest friend below.

No costly gifts or jewels rare
Shall prove her queenly dower,
But emblem of her love we wear,
A fragrant unpretentious flower.

Still may we treas the narrow way,
Those sainted mothers trod,
Tho' steep, it leads no foot astray,
But guides us home to God.

UTAH MAN HAS 29 KIDS AND FOOLS COURT

Sends Four Wives Back To Salt Lake City "Where He Won't Be Bothered."

Chicago, June 10.—Petitions asking that George Fear, 65 years old, be compelled to support a total of twenty-nine children, which were filed by four women, who claimed to be his wives, were dismissed today when Fear told Mrs. Josephine Lawrence, a court investigator, that he had shipped all the women back to Salt Lake City, "where," Fear said, "I won't be bothered."

Fear said he came from Salt Lake to Chicago to develop a patent and brought only one of his wives, Mrs. Josephine Fear, with him, leaving her nineteen children at Salt Lake. Recently the other three women arrived. All was peaceful, he declared, until he had to leave Chicago for a short business trip. Mrs. Josephine Fear then became alarmed lest he should desert her and the other women, and applied to Mrs. Lawrence. The other women then filed petitions. However, the cases will not be prosecuted now since the complaining witnesses have left town.

Lee would like to know whether or not Bob Fitzsimmons held three world's championship titles at the same time. Says it will decide a bet.

Far be it from us, J. Lee, to participate in sinful gambling affairs — now that Governor Sulzer, a company of district attorneys and a regiment of sheriffs are all threatening to turn out the National Guard to prevent betting. However, you may not have more than a million at stake, so just this office we'll oblige.

No. Fitz didn't hold the three titles at one time, although he held three all right.

He was a middleweight champion, and never lost his title in that class. He held two at once, for he was middleweight champion when he whipped Corbett at Carson. But after that time he fought only heavyweights.

BASEBALL.

A perusal over records of the Nationals for some years back discloses the fact that the material in the team as at present composed is comparatively new to the baseball club in the Capital City. But seven men on the pay roll of the club have been with the team for a period longer than two seasons, and of these but two Johnson and Milan have been enlisted for five years. Johnson, who is now senior member of the squad, joined the Nationals in midseason of 1907, and shortly afterward Clyde Milan went through the necessary preliminaries that made him a full-fledged member of Washington's representatives on the American League circuit.

The years in which the various members of the squad first reported are shown in the following table:

1907—Johnson, Milan.
1908—McBride.
1909—Groom, Schaefer.
1910—Ainsmith, Henry.
1911—Hughes, Cashion, Morgan.
1912—Foster, Moeller, Shanks, A. Williams, Engel, Gandil, Gallia, Laporte.
1913 — Barton, Bickess, Austin, Munch.

New York, June 10.—Report has it that Manager McGraw of the Giants is not going to stand pat on the trades he has made thus far, but that he is going further with the material that swaps and purchases have given him. In other words, McGraw plans to swap Grant, Merkle and Fromme for Monetchy of the Cardinals. He plans thus to give a third baseman, a first-baseman and a pitcher, the last named dearly bought, for a heavy-hitting, fine fielding first-baseman.

THREE KILLED 9 HURT AS BIG GUN EXPLODES

Breech-Block Blows Off Cannon at Fort Moultrie in Night Target Practice.

Charleston, S. C., June 10. —Three soldiers were killed and nine or more seriously injured at Fort Moultrie, Monday, when the breech blew off a 3-inch gun, which was being used for night target practice. Privates Baxter, Christensen and Dalton were killed, the former two being cut in two and dying instantly.

Capt. Hanna, who was standing with several other officers of the Coast Artillery, was badly wounded by a fragment from the exploded cannon. Hospital Steward Lamar was injured in the right arm and hand.

One account stated that the tragedy occurred at Battery Bingham, and another that it occurred at Battery Lord.

It was stated by a resident of Sullivan's island that several officers were reported wounded. He said that it was difficult to learn just how many were wounded when the fragments of the cannon scattered among the soldiers close by.

It was reported that the breech had not been properly closed after the insertion of a cartridge, and that when the cap was exploded the breech was thrown back with terrific force.

The wounded men were rushed to the Post Hospital, where immediate attention was given them. Several Several Charleston physicians hurried to the fort and assisted in taking care of the victims.

Fort Moultrie is the headquarters of the Charleston division of the South Atlantic coast artillery district, with Maj. A. G. Jenkins, who resides at Fort Moultrie, in command. Four companies of coast artillery, the 16th, 78th, 144th and 145th, are stationed there, although some of the soldiers garrison the nearby Fort Sumter.

CHIEF WILKIE WILL RESIGN

Secret Service Head Going Into Commercial Life at Chicago

Washington, June 10.—John E. Wilkie, supervising special agent of the customs service and for 14 years chief of the United States secret service, will resign from the government service shortly, it was learned in official quarters. Mr. Wilkie will retire voluntarily to accept a commercial position in Chicago. His successor has not yet been chosen.

Mr. Wilkie was head of the force that investigated the wide-spread customs frauds unearthed during the past few years and as chief of the secret service he organized the emergency force of men that checkmated Spanish spies during the war with Spain.

Mr. Wilkie was in Boston recently in connection with the grand jury investigation of alleged frauds in the importation of women's gowns. It is not expected that he will retire until Secretary McAdoo has chosen his successor.

HOME HEALH CLUB

Written by
DR. DAVID H. REEDER,
Chicago, Ill.

SMOTHERED—Part 1—Near Rockford, Illinois, a proud young couple took their baby and drove eight miles to the home of friends where the little speck of humanity was loved and petted to the delight of its parents. After the party, the drive home through the cold winter night, took a long time and the little one must be well wrapped and covered. Cover after cover was put over it and then warm robes. The heat of the mother's body would also help and they were sure there was no danger. Their own faces were bared to the keen winds and they took long deep draughts of the pure, fresh, fresh ozone into their lungs as they joyously recounted the pleasures of the evening and planned the future of the little one.

A brief dispatch to the big daily newspaper of the next day told the balance of the story:

"When Mr. and Mrs. —— arrived home from a Christmas-patty, after an eight mile ride, they found their 3-months' old infant had smothered to death in the mother's arms."

The surprising thing to me is that more babies are not smothered. It is a fact that many of them are killed every summer, with the heat simply because the fond mother wraps them up too much. When the thermometer registers above 85 degrees, the baby needs but little more than a light slip, wrapping it up in flannels and snugging up with pillows and then a baby blanket may appear to be a kindness, but if you think it is comfortable just try it yourself for a few hours on a hot sultry night. The baby's blood circulates much faster than yours and it feels the heat even more than you do, so be sensible and dress it according to the weather.

Yes, there are adults that smother themselves to death. A young woman came to me for a consultation. She claimed to take every precaution but, suffered continuously with colds. It was midsummer and a very hot day. I noticed that she had on a heavy woollen shawl and asked her to put it aside as it warm in my office. She refused, saying that she was sure to catch more cold if she did so. Then I called a nurse—and had her taken to the bath room to prepare for an examination of the lungs. Here is the nurse's report of the clothes removed:

1 heavy woollen shawl.
1 woollen underskirt.
1 winter jacket.
1 dress.
1 jersey waist.
1 Jersey underskirt.
1 woollen union-suit.
1 medium union-suit.
1 pair lisle stockings.
1 pair heavy woollen stockings.

Then there was a corset and corset cover and a few other things just to keep warm.

The skin was simply drenched with perspiration. The pores were so relaxed that the juices of the body simply flowed out without effort. It took weeks gradually eliminate the enveloping clothing and convince the sufferer that she was simply smothering herself. There was absolutely nothing else the matter with her. Although when the nurse went to her room that night she found all the windows tightly closed and all the available covering and the shawl piled on the bed. To have gone on in the same way would have meant another victim of the great white plague.

CLUB NOTES.

I will gladly answer all inquiries for information on health subjects from readers of this publication if same are addressed to Home Health Club, 5039 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago. Send full name and address, with [illegible] cents postage.

Dear Doctor—Would you kindly answer through the Club Notes what to do for offensive perspiration. Whether I perspire or not, this offensive odor is there, and I have tried every remedy advertised and even consulted the advise of several physicians. Does this trouble stay with one all through life? I will highly appreciate any prescription or remedy of yours.
I. F.

The complaint which you describe is a very annoying one, but as a rule may be readily overcome by simple treatment. Wash the surface affected daily with a strong solution of Borac Acid or with a 1 per cent. solution of Formalin in water. Internally the homeopathic preparation of Silicea in 3X potency should be taken in doses of 4 to 6 tablets morning and evening. This remedy may be obtained from any homeopathic pharmacy or an address will be given upon direct inquiry for same. A wash composed of vinegar to which has been added two teaspoonfuls of salt and a teaspoonful of red pepper to the pint, is also very effective. A laxative and non-stimulating diet should be used, consisting principally of bran bread, green vegetables, fruits and fruit juices and buttermilk. Meat and eggs, especially should be avoided for a time. Plenty of water should be taken, at least 4 to 5 pints daily. If the feet are effected, powdered boric should be dusted into the stockings and the home treatment for sweating feet, mentioned in the Vol. 2 of the Home Health Club books carried out.

Dear Doctor—The soap which was recommended for the hair in a recent club notes cannot be obtained at our local drug stores. We have tried a number of druggists, but they do not have it and do not know what to ask for to get it. The best thing they have is Castile Soap. Please state where the one recommended can be obtained.
H. S.

Call for Sturgeon's Green Soft Soap and you will get very nearly the same article as that for which the formula was given. If your druggist does not have it you could send direct to any of the large factories and ask for soft soap made of potash and olive oil, or if you care to make a personal request with postage, I will give an address where it can be obtained exactly as recommended.

SMITH TOWNSHIP COUNCIL

The members of the municipal Council of the Township of Smith, met in the County Council Chamber, Peterborough, on May 28th at ten o'clock.

After Mr. Robt. Northey, the new councillor, had taken the necessary Declaration of Qualification and of office, the members took their seats with Reeve Garbutt in the chair. All members present; minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed.

Mr. A. J. McWilliams and Albert Nichols addressed the council and asked that the East Communication Road be repaired from the 7th Con. to the Mud Lake road.

Reeve Garbutt in reply said that as this piece of road was the only outlet for the 7th Con., it should be put in a better condition and that the matter would be taken up with Mr. G. W. Mann, the Overseer, with power to act.

A petition was received from Mr. Arthur Kennedy and a number of ratepayers asking that a portion of road on Downie street, between Wolsley and Wellington, be opened. Several of the petitioners were present and spoke in favor of the project. Reeve Garbutt, on behalf of the Council, said that he did not think the matter feasible, while it might benefit a few lot holders, the municipality was not justified in expending any money at the present time.

Moved by Mr. McKee and Mr. Northey, that no action be taken.—Carried

A petition was presented by Mr. Hughes Charles and Mr. Eastwood, signed by a large number of the property owners of Chemong Park, requesting that Hatton Ave. be opened from Bellevue Avenue to Linton Avenue. Reeve Garbutt stated that the matter would be attended to as soon as possible.

Mr. Knox addressed the Council, in aid of the Lakefield Agricultural Society, and asked that a grant be given. Moved by Mr. McKee and Mr. Northey, that the Treasurer be instructed to forward ten dollars to the Secretary of the Lakefield Agricultural Society.—Carried.

Mr. Jno. Millage addressed the council and said that in order to reach his lot, No. 39, in the 16th concession, it was necessary for him to travel over his neighbor's property, and requested that the Council open up a portion of this Concession. Mr. Garbutt said that the road had already been cut out, but the brush had not been burned, and as Mr. Millage was the appointed Overseer, the matter was in his control.

Moved by Mr. Cann and Mr. McKee that Colonization Road By-Law No. 710, as amended by the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, be read a third time and finally passed.
—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McKee and Mr. Telford that the Reeve be appointed to look after the expending of the money under By-Law No. 710.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Telford and Mr. Cann, that the sum of $150 be granted each member of the council for extra repairs of roads.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McKee and Mr. Northey, that the Reeve and Clerk be instructed to sign an agreement with the City Council as regards Boundary roads.—Carried.

A By-Law was passed, allowing the Township Council of Harvey, to extend their municipal Telephone system into the Township of Smith, to connect with the premises of Mr. A. G. Shearer, Hall's Bridge.

Moved by Mr. Cann and Mr. McKee that the Treasurer be instructed to pay the following accounts:

Geo. Milburn, work on road, $6.25; S. A. Northey, work on road, $6.00; Jas. Blewett, two sheep killed, $13.33; J. A. Jobe, goods to T. Cullen, $8.00; J. C. McConney, work on road $5.10; Henry Pearson, one sheep killed, $5.33; P. T. Udy, goods to T. Cullen, $16.00; Dr. J. A. Morgan, services as M.H.O., $27.30; Thos. Armstrong, work on road, $6.75; Jas Grant, work on road, $3.30; Review Printing Co., printing acc., $14.39; Jos. Donaldson, work on road, $9.50; Geo. Cochrane, conveying J. Nugent to House of Refuge, $1.50; G. W. Mann, repairing culvert, $15.95.—Carried.

Council adjourned to meet again in August.

Women for Peace.

One of the fruits of sex equality will be the decline of war—international strife, industrial strife and sex strife, declares the Twentieth Century Magazine. Women may not know how to play fair, at first, but they will be more apt pupils than the men. In masculine contests the rules are often more important than the game. What is fair in war? Murder, but not torture. What is fair in industrial war? Starvation, but not murder. Dynamiting is not fair, but blacklisting is, evicting is, monopolizing food is, maintaining tuberculous tenements is. These rules won't pass, boys, when the girls learn to play the game. The tyrannical employer will have to go, syndicalism and sabotage (the logical answers to arbitrary capitalism) will have to go. We already have the children's bureau with a real statesman, Julia Lathrop, at the head. We are getting the beginning of engenics. When the instinct of motherhood is allowed free play we shall become constructive, synthetic, peaceful.

"Killer" Killed

At Coatbridge David Russell, fifteen years and eleven months old, was formally remitted to the sheriff on a charge of murdering "a killer" at the slaughter-house named William Stewart. Russell, who is himself "a killer," is alleged to have stabbed Stewart fatally during a dispute over a calf skin.

TENDERS FOR DREDGING

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Dredging, Port Arthur, Ontario," will be received until 4.00 P.M., on Friday, June 13, 1913, for dredging required at Port Arthur, Ont.

Tenders will not be considered unless made on the forms supplied, and signed with the actual signatures of the tenderers.

Combined specification and form of tender can be obtained on application to the Secretary, Department of Public Works, Ottawa. Tenders must include the towing of the plant to and from the work. Dredges and tugs not owned and registered in Canada shall not be employed in the performance of the work contracted for. Contractors must be ready to begin work within thirty days after the date they have been notified of the acceptance of their tender.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, for five per cent (5 p.c.) of the contract price, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,
R. C. DESROCHERS,
Secretary.

Some Particulars of the Expedition Which Ended in the Death of Five Explorers

Captain R. F. Scott, who with four companions perished in an Antarctic blizzard, was the first to explore the great southern ice barrier to a distance of 400 miles, and to push into the indention of the Antarctic known as Ross' Sea. The Scott expedition was a result of the enthusiasm aroused by the successful Shackleton expedition, which approached to within a few miles of the South Pole, and returned bringing a vast quantity of scientific information concerning the plateau upon which the Pole is located. The enthusiasm could hardly have been less had Shackleton actually reached the Pole. Captain Scott, of the Royal Navy, who had already won fame as an explorer, and was admitted by Shackleton to be better fitted than any other man to succeed, was placed in charge of an expedition. Funds to the extent of $200,000 were subscribed by the British Government and by private individuals, the good ship Terra Nova was chartered and the expedition was got under way. It was on Jun. 1, 1910, that the ship, an old Dundee whaler, which had been refitted for the work, sailed from London. It was generally conceded that this was the best equipped expedition that ever left for the South, for the ship carried on board some sixty men and supplies to last them three years

Met Amundsen

At that time Scott had no idea that there would soon be another Roland in the field. In fact, when the Fram left Norway it was announced that the purpose of Amundsen was to cruise in Northern waters on a general exploration, the chief prize having been already secured by Peary. It must have been somewhat of a surprise to Scott, therefore, when he met the Fram coasting along the great ice barrier near McMurdo Sound. When spoken to, Amundsen admitted that his purpose was to reach the Pole if he could do so, and the adventurers separated, wishing each other luck. In England when news of the real purpose of Amundsen's voyage became known there was some tendency to criticise him for having attempted to steal a march upon his rival, which was considered, not unsportsmanlike, perhaps, but unscientific. However, there is no evidence that the Norwegian took any unfair advantage of his rival, and there is no longer any disposition to withhold from him full praise for his exploit.

The Last Year

The plans that Scott laid when he left London in 1910 seem to have been adhered to with the slight difference that the return is made nearly a year later than was intended. Early in 1912 the Terra Nova returned to civilization with the news that Scott was staying on and did not expect to return before 1913. Almost simultaneously the news came that Amundsen had succeeded. The Scott expedition reached the base of McMurdo Sound early in the year 1911. There the commander established his permanent camp, and a month later set forth to stock caches along the road to the South Pole. October of 1911 was chosen as the month for the final attack on the Pole, and it was calculated that the journey there and back to the Winter camp would not occupy more than two months. It would appear, however, that a much longer time was taken, which threw Scott and his companions into the throes of terrific blizzards common in February and March. The three great Antarctic expeditions, besides representing a friendly rivalry among three great explorers, embodied a contest with dogs, ponies and motor sleds. Amundsen succeeded with the dogs. Shackleton used ponies to good advantage, and it was thought that the motor sleighs of Scott would bear him more swiftly and safely to his journey's end. In this, however, Amundsen thinks Scott made a fatal mistake. He believes that dogs would have been of more value to Scott.

EXPERIENCE WITH
Sanol's Remedies

THE SANOL MFG. CO.,
WINNIPEG.
Jan. 22, 1912.

Dear Sirs.—

It is just one year ago that we put in the first stock of SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES CURE, and we wish to state that we have been amazed at the remarkable sale of these remedies. We have had many repeat orders in both our stores and have sold retail $1000.00 worth of these remedies. In spite of all these sales we have yet to hear of one dissatisfied customer, while many have come back to tell us of the wonderful cures resulting from the Medicine. Another striking feature of this business is that so many customers come in stating that SANOL has cured Mr.—— their intimate friend, and they wished to try it for themselves.

Wishing you continued success, we are, Yours truly,

ANDREW'S DRUG STORE,

"Not for the better," was the reply. "I am afraid his fever is increasing."

"And has the surgeon seen him this evening?"

"Not tonight."

"Why not?" exclaimed Miss Kittridge in great surprise. "Surely his condition is sufficiently critical to demand more than one brief visit in the morning."

"I can't ask him to come twice with so many waiting for him," said Mrs. Varney.

"But they would not refuse you, Mrs. Varney," said Miss Kittridge quickly. "There's that man going back to the hospital, he's in the dining room yet. I'll call him and send word that—"

She started impulsively toward the door, but Mrs. Varney caught her by the arm.

"No," she said firmly; "I can't let you."

"Not for your own son?"

"I am thinking of the sons of other mothers. The surgeon has done all that he can for him. And think how many other sons would have to be neglected if he visited mine twice. He will come again tomorrow."

The second woman stood looking at her in mingled sympathy and amazement, and there was a touch of pride in her glance, too. She was proud of her sex, and she had a right to be here in Richmond that spring, if ever.

"I understand," said Miss Kittridge at last. "I suppose you are right."

They stared at each other, white-faced, a moment, when there entered to them youth and beauty incarnate. There was enough resemblance between the pale, white-haired mother and the girlish figure in the doorway to proclaim their relationship. The girl's cheek had lost some of its bloom and some of its roundness. There was too much that was appalling and fearful in and about Richmond then not to leave its mark even upon the most youthful and the most buoyant, yet things did not come home to the young as they did to those older. She was still a lovely picture, especially in the soft radiance of the candles. She carried her hat in her hand. The flowers upon it were assuredly those of yester-year, it would not have passed muster as the mode anywhere except in besieged Richmond; and her dress although it fitted her perfectly, was worn and faded and had been turned and patched and altered until it was quite beyond further change, yet she wore it as airily as if it had been tissue of silver or cloth of gold.

The mother's face brightened.

"Edith, dear," she exclaimed, "how late you are! It is after eight o'clock. You must be tired out."

"I am not tired at all," answered the girl cheerily. "I have not been at the hospital all afternoon; this is my day off. How is Howard?"

"I wish I could say just the same, but he seems a little worse."

The girl's face went suddenly grave. She stepped over to her mother, took her hand and patted it softly.

"Is there nothing you can do?"

"My dear," said her mother, "Howard—we—are all in God's hands."

She drew a long breath and lifted her head bravely.

"Miss Kittridge," said the girl, "I have something very important to tell mother, and—"

Miss Kittridge smiled back at her.

"I am going right away, honey. There is lots of work for us to do and—"

"You don't mind, I hope," said Edith Varney, calling after her as she went into the hall.

"No, indeed," was the reply.

Mrs. Varney sat down wearily by the table, and Edith pulled up a low stool and sat at her feet.

"Well, my dear?"

"Mamma—what do you think? What do you think?"

"I think a great many things," said Mrs. Varney, "but—"

"Yes, but you wouldn't ever think of this."

"Certainly I shall not, unless you tell me."

"Well, I have been to see the president."

"The president—Mr. Davis?"

"Yes."

"And what did you go to see the president for?"

"I asked him for an appointment for Captain Thorne."

"For Captain Thorne! My dear—"

"Yes, mother, for the war department telegraph service. And he gave it to me, a special commission. He gave it to me for father's sake and for Captain Thorne's sake—he has met him and likes him—and for my own."

"What sort of an appointment?"

"Appointing him to duty here in Richmond, a very important position. He won't be sent to the front, and he will be doing his duty just the same."

"But, Edith, you don't—you can't—"

"Yes, it will, mother. The president—I just love him—told me they needed a man who understood telegraphing and who was of high enough rank to take charge of the service. As you know, most of the telegraph operators are privates, and Captain Thorne is an expert. Since he's been here in Richmond he's helped them in the telegraph office often. Lieutenant Foray told me so."

Mrs. Varney rose and moved away. Edith followed her.

"Now, mamma!" she exclaimed; "I feel you are going to scold me, and you must not, because it's all [illegible] and the commission will be sent over here in a few minutes—just as soon as it can be made out—and when it comes I am going to give it to him myself."

"Edith Dear, How Late You Are."

Mrs. Varney moved over toward the table and lifted a piece of paper, evidently a note.

"He is coming this evening," she said.

"How do you know?" asked her daughter.

"Well, for one thing," said her mother, "I can remember very few evenings when he hasn't been here since he was able to walk out of the hospital."

"Mamma!"

"And for another thing, this note came about half an hour ago."

"Is it for me?"

"For me, my dear, else I shouldn't have opened it. You can read it, if you like."

"Has it been here all this time?" exclaimed Edith jealously.

"All this time. You will see what he says. This will be his last call; he has his orders to leave."

"Why, it's too ridiculous!" said the girl; "just as if the commission from the president wouldn't supersede everything else. It puts him at the head of the telegraph service. He will be in command of the department. He says it is a good-bye call, does he?" She looked at the note again and laughed. "All the better, it will be that much more of a surprise. Now, mamma, don't you breathe a word about it, I want to tell him myself."

"But, Edith dear—I am sorry to criticise you—but I don't at all approve of your going to the president about this. It doesn't seem quite the proper thing for a young lady to interest herself so far—"

"But listen, mamma," and as she spoke the light went out of Miss Edith's face at her mother's grave and somewhat reproving aspect. "I couldn't go to the war department people. Mr. Arrelsford is there in one of the offices and ever since I—I refused him, you know how he has treated me! If I had applied for anything there, it would have been refused at once, and he would have got them to order Captain Thorne away right off. I know he would—why, that is where his orders came from!"

"But, my dear—"

"That is where they came from. Isn't it lucky I got that commission today. There's the bell; I wonder who it can be?" She stopped and listened while the door opened and Jonas, the butler, entered. "Is it Captain Thorne?" asked Edith eagerly.

"No, ma'am."

"Oh!"

"It's another offisuh, ma'am. He says he's fum de president an' he's got to see Miss Edith pussonally."

Jonas extended a card which, as he spoke, Edith took and glanced at indifferently.

"Lieutenant Maxwell," she read.

"Ask the gentleman in, Jonas," said Mrs. Varney.

"It's come," whispered Edith to her mother.

"Do you know who he is?"

"No—but he's from the president—it must be that commission."

At this moment old Jonas ushered into the drawing room a very dashing young officer, handsome in face, gallant in bearing, and dressed in a showy and perfectly fitting uniform, which was quite a contrast to the worn habiliments of the men at the front. Mrs. Varney stepped forward a little, and Lieutenant Maxwell bowed low before her.

"The President Directed Me to Deliver This into Your Hands."

"Good evening, ma'am. Have I the honor of addressing Miss Varney?"

"I am Mrs. Varney, sir."

"Madam," said the lieutenant, "I am very much afraid this looks like an intrusion on my part, but I come from the president, and he desires me to see Miss Varney personally."

"Anyone from the president could not be otherwise than welcome, sir. This is my daughter. Edith, let me present Lieutenant Maxwell."

The young lieutenant, greatly impressed, bowed profoundly before her, and taking a large brown envelope from his belt, handed it to her.

"Miss Varney," he said, "the president directed me to deliver this into your hands, with his compliments. He is glad to be able to do this, he says, not only at your request, but because of your father and for the merits of the gentleman in question."

"Oh, thank you," cried the girl, taking the envelope.

"Won't you be seated, Lieutenant Maxwell?" said Mrs. Varney.

"Yes, do," urged the girl, holding the envelope pressed very tightly to her side.

"Nothing would please me so much, ladies," answered the lieutenant, "but I must go back to the president's house right away. I'm on duty this evening. Would you mind writing me off a line or two, Miss Varney, just to say you have received the communication?"

"Why, certainly, you want a receipt. I'll go upstairs to my desk; it won't take a moment. And could I put in how much I thank him for his kindness?"

"I am sure he would be more than pleased," smiled Lieutenant Maxwell, as Edith left the room and hastened up the stairs.

"We haven't heard so much cannonading [illegible], Lieutenant," said Mrs. Varney. "Do you know what it means?"

"I don't think they are quite positive, ma'am, but they can't help looking for a violent attack to follow."

"I don't see why it should quiet down before an assault."

"Well, there is always a calm before a storm," said the lieutenant. "It might be some signal, or it might be they are moving their batteries to open on some special point of attack. They are trying every way to [illegible] through our defenses, you know."

"It's very discouraging. We can't seem to drive them back this time."

"We're holding them where they are, though," said Maxwell proudly. "They'll never get in unless they do it by some scurvy trick; that's where the danger lies. We are always looking out for it, and—"

At this moment Edith Varney re-entered the room. She had left her hat upstairs with the official-looking envelope, and had taken time to glance at a mirror and then to thrust a red rose in her dark hair. The impressionable young lieutenant thought she looked prettier than ever.

"Lieutenant Maxwell," she said, extending a folded paper, "here is your receipt—"

The butler's words to some one in the hall interrupted her further speech.

"Will you jes' kin'ly step his way, suh!" she heard Jonas say, and as Edith turned she found herself face to face with Captain Thorne!

CHAPTER III.

Orders to Captain Thorne.

On the sleeves of Captain Thorne's coat the insignia of a captain of Confederate artillery were displayed; his uniform was worn, soiled, and ill-fitting, giving honorable evidence of hard service; his face was pale and thin and showed signs of recent illness, from which he had scarcely recovered. In every particular he was a marked contrast to Lieutenant Maxwell.

"Miss Varney," he said, bowing low.

"We were expecting you," answered Edith, giving her hand to Thorne. "Here's Captain Thorne, mamma!"

Mrs. Varney shook hands with him graciously while her daughter turned once more to the other man, with the acknowledgment of the order, which she handed to him.

"I wasn't very long writing it, was I, Lieutenant Maxwell?" she asked.

"I've never seen a quicker piece of work, Miss Varney," returned that young man, putting the note in his belt and smiling as he did so. "When you want a clerkship over at the government offices, you must surely let me know."

"You would better not commit yourself," said Edith jestingly; "I might take you at your word."

"Nothing would please me more," was the prompt answer. "All you have got to do is just apply, and refer to me, of course."

"Lots of other girls are doing it," continued Edith half-seriously. "They have to live. Aren't there a good many where you are?"

"Well, we don't have so many as they do over at the treasury. I believe there are more ladies over there than men. And now I must go."

"A moment," said Mrs. Varney, coming forward with Thorne. "Do you gentlemen know each other?"

Captain Thorne shook his head and stepped forward, looking intently at the other.

"Let me have the pleasure of making you acquainted, then. Captain Thorne—Lieutenant Maxwell."

Thorne slowly inclined his head. Maxwell also bowed.

"I have not had the pleasure of meeting Captain Thorne before, although I have heard of him a great many times," he said courteously.

"Yes?" answered the other, who seemed to be a man of few words.

"In fact, captain, there is a gentleman in one of our offices who seems mighty anxious to pick a fight with you."

"Really!" exclaimed Captain Thorne, smiling somewhat sarcastically; "pick a fight with me! To what office do you refer, sir?"

"The war office, sir," said Lieutenant Maxwell, rather annoyed.

"Dear, dear!" continued Thorne urbanely; "I didn't suppose there was anybody in the war office who wanted to fight!"

"And why not, sir?" asked Lieutenant Maxwell haughtily, while Edith barely stifled a laugh, and her mother even smiled.

"Well, if he wanted to fight, he'd hardly be in an office at a time like this, would he?"

Captain Thorne's sarcasm seemed to perturb the youngster, but his good breeding got the better of his annoyance.

"I'd better not tell him that, captain," he said with a great effort at lightness; "he would certainly insist upon having you out."

"That would be too bad," said the captain. "It might interfere with his office hours and—"

"He doesn't believe it, Miss Varney," said Maxwell, turning to the younger woman, "but it is certainly true. I dare say you know the gentleman—"

"Please don't, lieutenant," interrupted Edith quickly. "I would rather not talk about it, if you please."

"Of course," said Maxwell, "I didn't know there was anything—"

"Yes," said Edith. "Let's talk about something else. You know there is always the weather to fall back on—"

"I should say so," laughed the lieutenant, "and mighty bad weather for us, too."

"Yes, isn't it?"

They turned away, talking and laughing somewhat constrainedly, while Mrs. Varney picked up the note that was still lying on the table.

"From your note, I suppose you are leaving us immediately, Captain Thorne. Your orders have come?"

"Yes, Mrs. Varney," said the captain. "I am afraid this must be the last of my pleasant calls."

"Isn't it rather sudden? Are you quite well? It seems to me they ought to give you a little more time to recover."

"I have no doubt that I am or feel much better than I look," said the captain, "and we have to be ready for anything, you know. I have been idle too long already."

"Yes, I suppose so," said Mrs. Varney. "Well, it has been a great pleasure to have you call upon us. When you are away we shall greatly miss your visits."

"Thank you; I shall never forget what they have been to me."

"Lieutenant Maxwell is going, mamma," said Edith.

"So soon! Please excuse me a moment, captain. I am very sorry you have to hurry away, lieutenant; we shall hope for the pleasure of seeing you again, if your duties permit."

"I shall certainly avail myself of your invitation, if you will allow me." He saluted Captain Thorne. "Good evening, sir."

Thorne, of course, returned the courteous salute of his junior.

"Lieutenant Maxwell," he said pleasantly, as Mrs. Varney followed Lieutenant Maxwell into the hall.

"Now remember, you are to come some time when duty doesn't call you away so soon," she said, as he bowed himself out.

"Trust me not to forget that, Mrs. Varney," said the lieutenant, as he disappeared on the porch.

Captain Thorne and Edith were left alone. The girl stepped over to a small table on which stood a vase of roses, and, with somewhat nervous hands, she busied herself arranging them. The young officer watched her in silence for a little while, the moments tense with emotion.

"Shall I see Mrs. Varney again?" he began at last.

"Oh, I suppose so, but not now. I heard her go upstairs to Howard."

"How is he?"

"Desperately ill."

"I am sorry."

"Yes," said the girl.

"I have a very little time to stay and—"

"Oh—not long?" asked Edith.

"No, I am sorry to say."

"Well, do you know," she looked at him archly, "I believe you will have more time than you really think you have. It would be odd if it came out that way, wouldn't it?" she continued, as she played with the flower in her hand.

"Yes, but it won't come out that way," said Thorne, as he stepped closer to her.

"You don't know," she faltered, as Thorne drew the flower from her and took her hand in his. They stood there quiet a moment, and she did not draw her hand away. "Well, it makes no difference how soon you are going away; you can sit down in the meantime if you want to."

"It is hardly worth while," he said; "my time is so short."

"You would better," interrupted the girl; "I have a great many things to say to you."

"Have you?" he asked, sitting down on the little sofa by her side in compliance with her invitation.

"Yes."

"But I have only one thing to say to you—Miss Varney and—that is"—Thorne took her other hand in both of his—"good-bye."

Very different words had trembled on his lips, as he knew and as the girl knew.

"But I don't really think you will have to say that, Captain Thorne," said Edith slowly.

"I know I will."

"Then," said Edith more softly, "it will be because you want to say it."

"No," said Thorne, resolutely and of his own motion releasing her hands, which she had allowed him to hold without remonstrance; "it will be because I must."

He rose to his feet and took up his hat from the table as if, the thing being settled, he had only to go. But the girl observed with secret joy that he made no other effort at departure.

"Oh, you think you must, do you, Captain Thorne?" said Edith, looking up at him mischievously. "You are a very wise person, but you don't know all that I know."

"I think that is more than likely, Miss Varney, but won't you tell me some of the things that you know that I don't, so that I can approach your knowledge in that respect?"

"I wouldn't mind telling you one thing, and that is that it is very wrong for you to think of leaving Richmond now."

"Oh, but you don't know."

"Yes, I do."

"Well, what do you know?" asked Thorne curiously.

"Whatever you were going to say. Most likely it was that there's something or other I don't know about, but I do know this. You were sent here to recover, and you haven't nearly had enough time for it yet."

"I do look as if a high wind would blow me away, don't I?" he laughed.

"No matter how you look, you ought not to go. You are just making fun of it, as you always do of everything. No matter, you can have all the fun you like, but the whole thing is settled; you are not going away at all, you are going to stay here," she concluded with most decided but winning emphasis.

Oh, I'm not going? Well, that is quite a change for me," said Thorne composedly. He laid his hat back on the table and came closer to Edith. "Perhaps you wouldn't mind telling me what I am going to do."

"I don't mind at all and it is this. You see, I have been to see—I am almost afraid to tell you."

"Don't tell me," said the man with sudden seriousness, laying aside all his pleasantry, "because it can't be true. I have my orders, and I am leaving tonight."

"Where—to Petersburg—to the front?"

"We can't always tell where orders will take us," he said evasively, again sitting down beside her on the lounge.

He could scarcely tear himself away from her, from the delicious yet painful emotion aroused by her presence. He ought to have gone long since, yet he was with her, as he supposed, for the last time. Surely he might indulge himself a little. He loved her so desperately, so hopelessly.

"But listen," said the girl; "supposing there were other orders, orders from a higher authority, appointing you to duty here?"

"It would not make any difference."

"You don't mean you would go in spite of them?" cried the girl in sudden alarm.

Thorne looked at her gravely and nodded his head.

"But if it were proved that your first orders were a [illegible]—"

There are no criminal cases on the list, consequently the duties of the grand jury will be comparatively light.

A Feathered Gallotine.

Many of our readers have seen the big horned owls, in a cage in front of the Montreal House. Yesterday, as a Times scribe was passing, the proprietor, Mr. James Head, was feeding these big nocturnal birds. He had caught a big rat alive and dropped this rodent into the owl's cage. One of the birds, as quickly as any politician would grab at a government job, seized the rat with one claw about its body. The curved bills of the bird, almost simultaneously opened and enveloped the head of that rat. Snap! spit! and the rat's head lay on the bottom of the cage. The owl then gave the rat, all but its tail, a job in the Department of its Interior.

Anaemic Mothers Here is Relief !

You Can Enrich Your Worn-Out Blood and Quickly Renew Your Health With Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Sufferer of Twenty Years States Dr. Hamilton's Pills are a Real Cure

"I can't remember any time during the past twenty years when my heart wasn't aching. If I bent over, dark specks would come before my eyes, and it seemed as if all the blood in my body wanted to rush to my head." Thus opens the letter of Mrs. Enoch S. Spry, of Putnam P. O., and continuing her interesting statement she says: "Work or exertion made my heart beat terrible, and going upstairs caused such shortness of breath that it fairly frightened me. I tell you how I feel to-day and you can understand what a great cure Dr. Hamilton's Pills have made. I feel strong enough now to work like a man, as for going upstairs on the run, it doesn't bother me at all. I eat and sleep as any person ought, and as for dizziness which used to frighten me so much, it has entirely disappeared. Dr. Hamilton's Pills are a wonderful medicine. They helped me, and I know every woman that uses them will have comfort and good health.

Refuse anything offered you instead of Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut, 25c. per box at druggists and storekeepers, or the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston.

Lindsay Tramp Resort Gone.

The underbrush and debris along the banks of the classic Scugog River, at Lindsay, have been removed by fire caused by sparks from an engine. This spot, south of the iron bridge, used to be a tramps' headquarters. No longer will the work-fearing hobo recline at ease and gaze down the stretches of this stump fringed stream. No longer will the opaque waters of the Scugog reflect sunbeams into the tired eyes of Weary Willie and cause him the exertion of rolling further into the bush. Never again will the lights of camp fire, cooking stolen chicken in tomato cans, dance on the waters. No, the Lindsay Weary Willie has to move on.

DEATHS AND FUNERALS

Arthur Walsh.

The death occurred on Monday afternoon in the House of Providence, of Mr. Arthur Walsh, at the age of 65 years. He has been an inmate of the House for quite a long while and was greatly liked and respected by those with whom he associated every day. His remains were shipped to Cobourg, where interment will take place.

Widmer Hawke.

Mr. Widmer Hawke, vice-president of the O'Keefe Brewing Company, who is well known here and has a host of friends in Peterborough, died at his residence, 46 Oriole road, Toronto, yesterday morning. He had been ill for three years. Hoping to recover his health, he went to south of France in January last, and returned three weeks ago.

Mr. Hawke, who was in his fifty-second year, was born in Toronto, the son of the late George M. Hawke and grandson of Dr. Widmer. His early education was at Barron's School, at Gore's Landing, Rice Lake, after which he studied law in Toronto.

ANDIANOLA POSTMASTER WAS FOULLY MURDERED

Negro Slayer is Hunted by Bloodhounds—If Captured Lynching is Expected

Indianola, Miss., June 10.—C. Q. Weeks, prominent merchant, planter, and postmaster here, was killed by George Munson, one of his negro tenants, early yesterday. Mr. Weeks had gone to the negro's cabin to get him to go to the field. The negro refused and then with his pistol shot him through the head. Mr. Weeks lived for three hours after being shot. The negro made his escape and up to early afternoon had not been captured. The State's bloodhounds were obtained from the State farm at Parchman, north of here, and were on the trial by noon. The capture of the negro is expected. Sheriff Garnett and his deputies are on the scene.

Early this afternoon, it was said that they had the negro surrounded in a thicket, about twelve miles from town.

A great many people are in town and much excitement prevails. If the negro is captured it will take strong guards to save him from being lynched.

WEDDING BELLS.

Garvey—O'Brien.

A very pretty wedding was celebrated in St. Peter's Cathedral yesterday morning, when Miss Winnifred O'Brien, daughter of Mr. Alexander O'Brien, 450 Driscoll Terrace, was united in marriage to Mr. Joseph Garvey, son of Mr. Dennis Garvey, north Smith. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Father McColl.

Mr. Jas. F. Garvey, brother of the groom, was best man and Miss Kate O'Brien, sister of the bride, was the bridesmaid. The bride was given away by her father.

The happy couple left on the [illegible] (C.P.R.) train for Rochester and other points. On their return they will reside in East City.

Desmarteau—Kelly.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Peter's Cathedral at 6.30 a.m. yesterday, when Miss Florence Loretta Kelly, daughter of the late Mr. Thomas and Mrs. Kelly, became the bride of Mr. Louis R. Desmarteau, of Granby, Que. The Rev. Fr. Kelly, of Norwood, brother of the bride, performed the ceremony. The bride was attired in a travelling suit of tan-hued serge, and was attended by Miss Annie Kelly. Mr. C. White acted as best man.

After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was partaken of at the home of the bride, 374 Downie street when the happy couple left on the 8.20 a.m. G.T.R. train on a wedding trip to Montreal, Granby and other points.

On their return they will reside in Peterborough.

Anderson—Godfrey.

Early yesterday morning the St. John's church chimes rang out "Here comes the Bride," as Miss Mabel Godfrey, daughter of Mrs. W. Godfrey, East City, was united in marriage to Mr. William Herbert Anderson, of this city. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. [illegible]on Davidson. The bride and groom were unattended.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson left on the 7.10 C.P.R. train for Toronto and the West in the morning, and on their return will reside at 188 Stewart street.

Scully—Douglas.

In the Sacred Heart church yesterday morning a pretty wedding was solemnized by the Rev. Dr. O'Brien when Miss Stella Douglas became the charming bride of Mr. Joseph H. Scully. Miss Kate Scully acted as bridesmaid and Mr. Robert Scully was groomsman. The couple will take up their residence in Peterborough.

HOW ENGLISH BEAUTIES KEEP FACES YOUTHFUL

Christian Miller, F. C. I., noted English health expert, attributes the early aging of American women mainly to the "national nervousness." The women of England she says, can teach us the inestimable lesson of repose.

Another valuable lesson to be learned from the English woman is that she does not go in much for cosmetics, the continual use of which must ruin any complexion. The beauty devotees of King George's realm have the mercolized wax habit, a more wholesome method of keeping the face girlish-looking and healthy. Ordinary mercolized wax, used like cold cream, rejuvenates the worst complexion. American women may easily acquire the habit, this wax being obtainable at drugstores generally in the United States. It is applied at night and washed off in the morning. One ounce is sufficient to completely renovate a bad complexion. It has a peculiar action in keeping the face free from the particles of dead and devitalized scarf skin which are constantly appearing.—Woman's Herald

CAPT. SCOTT AND COMRADES WILL REST WHERE THEY ARE

That is What They Would Have Desired Themselves, Says Dr. C. S. Wright--Toronto Member of Party Returns

Toronto, June 11.—Standing in the warm sunlight on the smooth grass at one side of his father's house at 60 Crescent road this morning, Dr. C. S. Wright, chief physicist of the Scott Polar expedition, lean and sinewy, but showing no other traces of the hardships he had passed through during his stay in the Antarctic regions, described the effects of such a blizzard as the one which overpowered Captain Scott and his party on their return from the actual discovery of the Pole.

The contrast was a vivid one. Around the speaker were the comfortable, well built houses of Rosedale, the green trees, the well trimmed green lawns and hedges and across the street , girl in white working in the garden, while the subject was descriptive entirely of cold and biting winds sweeping over a flat and icy surface at the velocity of [illegible] miles an hour, a blinding cold snow.

Calm Before Blizzard.

"A dead calm usual proceeds a blizzard there," Dr. Wright said, "and the rise is very sudden. I remember one day I was working outside the tents taking off the gear from the sledges in a dead calm, and within five seconds a howling wind was sweeping great drifts of snow across the country. It is impossible to travel against such a storm, although it is possible to travel with it, but one is absolutely unable to see where one is going, as the snow is so thick that one cannot see farther away than an arm's length."

"The country, you see," he went on, "when the central plateau is once gained, is flat and rolling, the undulations being abot six miles apart It takes practically no time for a wind storm to rise and the force of it gains as it blows over an unbroken surface is terrific. Sometimes there is no real fall of snow at all, but the drifts blown by wind. A very light flurry generally [illegible] a blizzard"

FORMER LIBERAL OFFICIAL HELD ON SMUGGLING CHARGE

Dr. W. T. Patton, Once Liberal Candidate and Former Government Veterinary at Coutts, Alta, Alleged to Have Made Clean Breast of Affair--His Property Seized

Lethbridge, Alta, June 11.- Smuggling operations extending over a period of several years in which, it is alleged, the central figure is Dr. W. T. Patton, formerly Government veterinary at Coutts, and Liberal candidate for Warner riding at the recent election, have been unearthed by special Customs Officer Harris, police reported here to-day.

All of Patton's books and papers, together with a quantity of livestock in his possession, have been seized, also a number of horses at High River, Alea., once owned by Patton. It is understood Patton is making a clean breast of the affair, though the full extent of his operations is not known. Patton gave up his Government position at Coutts shortly after the election of the Conservatives to power at Ottawa.

BOMB WAS EXPLODED BUT SLEEPING MEN UNHARMED

Strikers Fail in Second Attempt to Destroy Trio Who Refused to Quit

Paterson, N.J., June 11.—Paterson was shaken early to-day by the explosion of a bomb in front of the home of three brothers, who had persistently refused to join the silk strikers. The house was damaged. but the sleeping occupants were uninjured, and later they went to work as usual under an escort of police. It was the second attempt to dynamite their home since the strike began.

Sixteen strike pickets were arrested in front of one of the Broad silk mills. The police report renewed enthusiasm on the part of the strikers. Fewer workers than usual, they say, entered the mills this morning. 25 men who returned to work at a dye mill Monday failed to report to-day.

22 in Cells; Five in Hospital.

Ipswich, Mass., June 11.—The Ipswich mills, near the gates of which one woman was killed and a number severely injured in a riot last night, were opened to-day without further distrurbances. Under the protection of a large force of police about 200 operatives resumed work. Nearly 600 remained on strike.

Two additional arrests in connection with last night's rioting were made to-day. In all 22 persons have been taken into custody and five of them are in the hospital.

VATICAN PUTS ON LIST A NOTED FRENCH BOOK

Milan, June 11.—The authorities at the Vatican have placed in the "index" as a book forbidden to be read, the famous French review, "Los Annales Philosophi Cretienne," edited by P. Laberthonniere, who is one of the foremost figures in ecclesiastical culture in France. All issues since 1905 may not be read.

A work by Pere Henri Bremond has also been forbidden to be read. Pere Bremond was a friend of the late Father Tyrell, and delivered the notaboration over that priest's grave.

SLUGGING MATCH IN THE NINTH, PETES BEATEN

Yesterday was ladies' day at Riverside Park; the fair fans were there stand being filled to capacity. while many found seats in autos standing round the grounds.

The game started out in good style, the play being close and exciting. Kubat of the visiting twirling staff worked hard, but could not find the plate, the high and very strong wind being responsible for a lot of bad pitching on both sides. Brodies handled the pill for the Petes for the first three innings and then gave way to Belting, after the visitors had tallied five runs. Belting held the Ottawa aggregation down for the balance of the game, or rather till the ninth innings. when the fireworks started and oh, the hitting, the field was hardly long enough, my how those Ottawa boys could hit they just scored five runs more, making the score 10—6. A few errors crept into the game, Swartz dropped two costly ones on account of the wind. Manager Shaughnessy made several changes during the course of the game. Umps Halligan on several occasions gave some very raw decisions which worked the boys up to fighting pitch, but it did not make any difference, our boys could not hit in the pinches.

Davie Rowan took a day off yesterday, Chapdelaine covering the first sack in excellent style, and was also their with the willow.

The batteries—Petes, Brodie, Belting and McNeal: Ottawa, Kubat, Ostermeyer, Render and Lage.

The Typos B.B.C. will meet at Riverside Park this evening for practice. Every member is urgently requested to be on hand at 5 o'clock.

OUR EVER-INCREASING TAX RATE

In our issue of last Saturdav, appeared, under the title, "Charity begins at home," a plain spoken article on the tax situation in Peterborough. In this article we claimed, and still claim, with 25 mills on the dollar taxation, it is time to call a halt before further mortgaging our present financial status to enlarge our city for unborn generations. We claim, in fact, past history has demonstrated it as a fact, that this exorbitant rate will never be lowered, with every probability of an increase. We maintain that before spending more of the people's money, to secure factories we should spend such money in securing modern improvements and more comforts for those paying this excessive taxation. With the cheaper power anticipated, under hydro electric, if factories will not come to Peterborough unless bribed, Peterborough will try to stagger along without them.

Again, we are told that the high rate of 25 mills is ameliorated bv low assessment of property. This is a farfetched apology for the 25 mills. We consider Peterborough, as compared with cities of similar population, has its property assessed for all it will stand. We intend, in the near future, to send a special commissioner to eight or ten towns of Ontario to investigate, as approximately as possible, assessment conditions.

Since the article referred to appeared, Mayor Bradburn called at this office and took serious exception to it. He claimed that whilst the conditions of our streets and bridges is not all that could be desired, this is a result of mismanagement in former civic administration. His Worship took exception also to our comparing conditions here with those existing in Lindsav. The Mayor assured us that he has now tentative offers from factories that might consider locating here. However, he is holding these over, pro tem, considering that the city cannot afford more money just now. We must, in justice, give great credit to the wise administration that has characterized civic affairs since Mr. Bradburn has held the position of Peterborough's Chief Magistrate. Mayor Bradburn is actuated by progressive and patriotic motives and is one of the best Mayors Peterborough has had in a quarter of a centurv. Still, we repeat, it is time to call a halt.

HYGENIC VENTILATION BY GAS LIGHTING

The supposition that gas lighting has a deleterious effect on the atmosphere of a room in which it is used at one time deterred many from taking advantage of this the cheapest form of illumination ; steps were finally taken to once for all confirm or disprove this theory.

Careful tests were carried out by competent specialists, prominent amongst these may be quoted tests made by Lewisham Infirmary, London, Eng., published in The Medical Magazine, Nov., 1910, Samuel Rideal, D.S.; F. J. C., published in The Journal of the Royal Sanitary Institute, 1907, V. B. Lewis, F. J. C., F. C. S., lecture before the Royal Dublin Society. The Tests absolutely disprove the theory.

It was shown that far from viatiating the atmosphere modern gas lamps reduce the germs and organic Impurities per cu. ft. in the atmosphere of a room approximately 30 per cent. below those contained in the atmosphere of the same room when lighted by electricity. This is accomplished by the sterilizing effect of the incandescent mantels through and around which the impure air is rapidly circulated. Secondly, the ventilation of such a room is almost perfect owing to the same rapid circulation lifting the impure air above the breathing level and discharging it through transoms, windows slightly down at the top, cracks, opening and pores in the ceilings. Thirdly, it was distinctly shown that owing to the absence of ultra-violet rays in gas light and the lack of glare from the comparatively large mantels, eye strain is reduced to a minimum, of all artificial sources of light it may therefore be said that gas lighting affords the most hygiene ventilation of rooms.

MR. BORDEN GOING HOME.

Ottawa, June 11.—Premier Borden will leave on Thursday for Halifax. His mother, it is understood, is not much improved and the Premier will visit her at the old Borden home.

DECLARES FLIER HYPNOTIZED HER

Pittsburgh, June 11.—Mrs. Walter Brookins, a daughter of former Lieut.-Gov. William M. Brown, of Newcastle, Pa., who became the wife of the noted aviator after a short, swift romance, has procured an annulment of her marriage in San Antonio, Tex., asserting that she married him while under his hypnotic influence.

Miss Emma Brown was visiting at Palm Beach, Fla., when Brookins was flying there. She was taken up by him in a hydro-aeroplane. Last January they married in San Antonio.

Mrs. Brookins stated in court 'that the marriage quickly became an unhappy one and unbearable. As she gradually freed herself of Brookins's "hypnotic influence," she no longer admired him, except for his skill as an aviator, and love flew out of the window.

The annulment comes as a surprise to the Newcastle friends of the bride, Brookins called frequently at the Brown home in Newcastle before the marriage and the affair seemed to progress normally. Mrs. Brookins is well known socially both in Newcastle and Pittsburgh. Her father was Lieutenant-Governor under former Gov. Samuel Pennypacker and is also a former state senator.

Brookins is 25 years old and has been married and divorced before. Notwithstanding his youth, he is known as the present dean of American exhibition flyers. He was the first successful pupil of Wilbur and Orville Wright at their original aviation grounds at Dayton, O. He gave up flying when he married Miss Brown and engaged in the manufacture and sale of motor boats on the Pacific coast.

TURKEY'S GRAND VIZIER IS MURDERED IN A MOTOR CAR

Report Reaches London From Constantinople of His Assassination--He Was Also The Minister of War

Constantinople, June 11.—The Turkish Grand Vizier Mahmoud Schevket Pasha was assassinated to-day by two men armed with revolvers, who attacked him while he was proceeding in his motor car to the Sublime Porte at noon.

It is believed in Government circles here that the assassination of the Grand Vizier was the outcome of a plot against the committee of Union and Progress.

Was a Pure Arab.

Mahmoud Svevket Pasha was a pure Arab and a native of Bagdad.

He was brought to Constantinople with his family when he was a boy.

After studying at the military school he graduated at 18 years with the highest honors. He was a great favorite of the former Sultan, Abdul Hamid, who appointed him to the general staff. Afterwards he proceeded to Germany and stayed there ten years studying the organization of the German army.

PRINCE OF WALES MUST WED BRIDE MUST BE PROTESTANT

London, June 11.—It was stated here to-day that it has just been decided as desirable that the Prince of Wales marry as soon as possible after he reaches the age of twenty-one.

In the meantime the list of eligible Princesses of Europe is being carefully examined. It is laid down that his Royal Highness must marry a Protestant Princess.

This narrows the field of selection considerable. During the next year or two his Royal Highness will visit each of the Protestant courts in Europe in turn.

It is more than probable, however, judging from matters as they stand at present that the Prince will ultimately marry a British Princess, nearly of his own age, thus following the example of his father. He will pay another visit to Germany this year, leaving London during the last week in July and remaining away three weeks. Subject to certain necessary limitations his Royal Highness will be given a completely free hand in the choice of a bride.

TO CONNECT UNSANITARY PROPERTIES WITH SEWERS

Bylaw to This Effect Passes Board of Works and Will go to Council for Ratification--M. H. O. to Enforce Connections From Premises Adjacent to Sewers and Reported a Menace to Health

The City's Board of Works met last evening, Chairman Buller in the chair. There were also present Aldermen Gordon, Johnston, Duffus and Anderson.

The poles on Babb's lane will be removed and re-located under the Engineer's supervision, when it is ascertained definitely to what width the street will be widened.

By laying a 5 ft. sidewalk on west side close to the verandah of the house on the lane a 29 foot street can be obtained. But Ald. Duffus is opposed to a street of that width, saying it will be just as inadequate 10 or 15 years from now as the present lane is. The exact width to which this lane will be eventually widened is left in abeyance for a few days, pending reconsideration of the matter.

Hunter St. Crossings.

On motion of Aldermen Johnston and Anderson, the Quaker Oats Co. will be notified to have the crossings over the railway sidings across Hunter street into their property, repaired.

New Sanitary By-law.

Chairman Ald. Buller read the draft form of a by-law prepared to enforce sanitary measures. The measure reads that all owners of land in the city on which privies, privy vaults, wells or cesspools which are reported by the Board of Health a nuisance shall have same filled in within one calendar month of being notified to do so by the Medical Health Officer. Also that all water closets, sinks, etc., abutting on streets where sewers are laid shall be drained into said sewers; and that such connections shall be made within one calendar month after notification to do so is made by the Medical Health Officer. In default of any property owner neglecting to make sewer connections when ordered to do so, the city shall make such connections and charge up cost of same against the property. Violation of this by-law may be punishable by a fine not exceeding $50, which together with the city's charges for connections (in cases where the city does the work by reason of owner refusing to do so on demand) shall be collected by distress if necessary.

On motion of Aldermen Gordon and Duffus, the Council will be recommended to adopt this by-law.

Harvey St. Sewer Not Practicable.

The city engineer reported that the plan for giving sewerage service to Harvey street and vicinity, is impracticable for want of sufficient elevation.

$750 to Widen Princess St.

The chairman reported that a price of $700 is asked for 350 x 16 feet of the Overend land on Princess street to provide a 66 foot right of way the whole length of the street. Another $50 would be needed for a portion of another small lot to complete the whole widening process. No action was taken. Ald. Gordon suggested that this question lay over till the Mayor's third time.

Must Buy Own Transformers.

The Peterborough Light and Power Co. notified the Board that Council must buy its own transformers to feed its 25 horse-power electric motor to run the stone crusher. The motor cost $360 and the three transformers $334. The Board decided to purchase the transformers needed. Power will cost $20 per horse power per year.

To Get Rid of Lot.

The Charity Board will be notified not to pile any more wood on the Ackerman lot on George street heretofore used as a town yard. The Board has no further use for this lot and do not intend paying taxes on it after this year.

Look Out for Donegal St. Bridge.

The Board was notified last night that a plank in the flooring on Donegal street bridge had broken through. The City Engineer, who was present, failing to connect with City Street Commissioner Evans, sent Fire Chief Howard and a man to the scene to temporarily repair. Before the Fire Chief reached the spot a couple of horses were hurt on the bridge

To Prevent Cutting Corners.

On motion of Ald. Gordon, the City Engineer was instructed to authorize property owners to erect any fencing necessary to prevent damage to street lines by persons cutting across corners.

Street Paving.

The City Engineer was instructed to prepare plans and specifications and ask tenders for street paving on George, from McDonnel street to the C.P.R. station, and on Charlotte from George to the G.T.R. station

Don't Want to Remove Back Fence.

The Little Lake Cemetery Co. took exception to the city's demand that they remove back on to their own property to fence built there or four feet on the street line, enclosing their Board office property at the corner of Crescent and Haggart street. President W. H. Moore wrote saying that the company had merely replaced the old "tie posts" by a presentable pipe fence, to which equestrians can tie their horses while visiting the cemetery. Visitors must have something to tie their horses to—a fence or post. The company had thought they had improved the appearance of the locality, and asked that the fence be allowed to remain.

This matter was left with the Mayor, Chairman and City Engineer to confer with the president of the company re this matter.

To Remove Obstructions.

On motion of Ald. Gordon the City Engineer was authorized to order the removal of all obstructions on the highways, such as tie posts, etc.

Crossing to St. Luke's.

On motion of Ald. Gordon and Anderson, the City Engineer was authorized to have the crossing to St. Luke's church fixed up when convenient to his department.

Poor Street Watering.

Ald. Gordon submitted that something will have to be done in the way of satisfactorily laying the dust. On George street these days the dust was flying in clouds and merchants had to close their doors. He suggested that as the districts are evidently too large, oil be used on a certain district and so narrow down the districts to be treated with water. In this way a better service could be obtained all round. It is possible to buy oil which will not injure auto tires.

Ald. Buller offered that the oil used last time was of too cheap a quality. Satisfactory road oil can be obtained by paying the price. However, the Board has not the price this year to go in for road oil.

Ald. Gordon—"Let it come from somewhere else. Something must be done."

On motion of Aldermen Gordon and Duffus, the Engineer was instructed to make enquiries regarding the use of oil on the streets elsewhere, and secure prices.

UNABLE TO SOAR ATWOOD SPENDS NIGHT ON THE LAKE

Sandusky, O., June 11.—Aviator Harry N. Atwood, who left Ecorse, Mich., yesterday afternoon for a flight across Lake Erie, to this city in a hydro-aeroplane arrived here early this morning.

Atwood was able to remain in the air only ten minutes after leaving Ecorse, and made the trip across the lake on the surface of the water. Engine trouble compelled him to descend.

After alighting on the water he proceeded to Hickory Island, where he put in on account of the choppy sea. When the lake became more calm he started out again, making Sandusky under his own power. The aviator was unable to get his craft into the air again, but on the water it behaved splendidly.

Atwood was none the worse for his night in the open, and did not even get wet from the spray thrown over his aeroplane.

Many owners of valuable dogs in London are afraid to exhibit them unless extraordinary precautions are taken against the suffragettes.

HURLS BAG OF FLOUR AT PREMIER IN HOUSE

Male Suffragette Raves Wildly Over Death of Miss Davison.

London, June 11.—One of the wildest scenes that ever marked a session of the House of Commons was enacted this afternoon, when a male suffragette sympathizer from the visitors' gallery hurled a bag of flour at Premier Asquith on the floor.

The missile narrowly missed the Premier, who was speaking at the time, and when it hit the floor the cloth burst, and a cloud of flour spread over the Ministerial benches, almost smothering the Cabinet members who were there.

The man who threw the flour also scattered pamphlets on the members sitting below, shouting incoherently and wildly about the death of Miss Emily Davison.

THE WEATHER.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaprilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 356 George St., directly opposite Crossman's store.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 25c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 25c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 386 George St., directly opposite Greenman's store.

THE NIMBLE CAT

Ingenious Apparatus Shows Why They Always Light on Their Feet

The ingenuity of a scientist has resulted in the construction of an apparatus to show why a cat in falling invariably alights on its feet.

This apparatus consists of a cardboard cylinder wherein are stuck four rods to serve for legs, together with a tail devised on similar principles. The object of the experiment is to show that a cat's peculiar faculty depends on the rotation of its tail with sufficient vigor.

It appears that this faculty is specially developed by climbing and leaping animals, such as members of the feline tribe, monkeys, squirrels, rats, and most lemurs. The tail plays a most important role in the turning process. According to the inventor of this apparatus all tree-inhabitating monkeys have long tails, and there is not the slightest doubt that these tails are of great aid to all climbers in enabling them to turn in the air. The tail also acts as a balancer, as evidenced in the case of a squirrel, which may be seen walking along a tight stretched wire or string, swinging its tail from side to side very much after the manner of the professional wire-walker balancing himself with a pole.

SUCCESSFUL WOMAN FARMER

Tills 330 Acres With Aid of Man Only at Harvest

Miss Georgina Binnie Clark, of Saskatchewan, Canada, was one of the first to prove that women are capable of running a farm in the Dominion as a paying concern. Always a lover of outdoor life, some years ago she bought a farm of 330 acres in Saskatchewan, and devoted herself to its development, with the result that at the end of the fourth season she made a decent profit.

Miss Clark plows her own land and combines a practical knowledge of scientific farming with her capabilities as a good housewife. Except at seedtime and harvest, when the employment of a laborer or two is a necessity the entire work of the farm is carried on by herself, with the help of her three women pupils. Her idea is that women should vary their enterprises more than they do, and not be content with merely earning wages but should endeavor to make money independently as well.

NATION OF WARRIORS

Montenegrins Descended From the Best of Old Servian Stock

The Montenegrins are a race of splendid fighters. They are the descendants of the aristocrats of the Serb race, for when Turkey conquered the old Servian Empire the nobles fled to the Black Mountains over the Adriatic, and there for centuries defied the Moslem authorities. For five hundred years they struggled to make their principality a kingdom, and that they have succeeded is proved by the title of their ruling monarch, King Nicholas I., the father-in-law of King Victor Emmanuel of Italy. The Montenegrins are a military race, and in many respects resemble the Japanese, having both the strength and weakness of the soldier caste. The national proverb of the Montenegrins is "You might as well take from me my brother as my rifle." They are inured to the use of arms, and in their mountain country are well nigh unconquerable.

LUNACY IN LONDON

Interesting details as to the number of lunatics in London and the causes of insanity are contained in the report of the Asylums Committee of the London County Council.

In London's ten asylums according to the report, there were 20,429 lunatics. Of 3,000 patients admitted during the fiscal year 800 are classified as hereditary lunatics. Another 300 come under the category of "alcoholic hereditary," whilst 700 drank themselves insane. Privation and starvation made eighty-four mad.

A table as to the occupation of patients shows that insanity is more prevalent amongst those who work with their hands than with those who use their brains. Of 1,700 women admitted 442 were domestic workers and 934 of no occupation, these latter including housewives. There were 166 in the "dress" industry. Only forty-six women placed under "professional occupations" could be said to be brain workers, all the others being persons whose occupations were of a manual nature. With the men the facts were almost the same.

Never Hang Mirror in Sun

If a mirror is hung where the sun's rays can fall directly upon it, the heat will affect the quicksilver on the back of it; the glass will become dull and cloudy. Whitening mixed to a soft paste with water, to which a few drops of ammonia have been added, is excellent for cleaning mirrors.

A STAMP MACHINE

Designed to do Away With the Licking of Postage Stamps

To eliminate the use of the unsanitary postage stamp is the object of an ingenious invention patented by a Montreal man, Mr. C. W. King.

Instead of selling postage stamps, Mr. King would have the Government sell a stamping machine. He invented one which, he claims, would answer the purpose. This machine can be set so that it will only stamp a certain number of letters, say five hundred, or a thousand, and when it has been used that number of times it locks automatically, and can only be set again by the post office officials.

The banker or merchant buys the machine, paying for it according to the number of impressions it is set for.

The die used would be unsaleable by vendors. Mr. King would guard against forgery by having each machine bear a special number on its stamp, so that every purchaser would have a number of his own, and thus if duplicates came in, he claims they could be traced.

Record Price for Timber

The highest price ever paid for pine timber in Ontario, $15 per 1,000 feet board measure, was realized from the sale by tender of limits on the Jocko River, Nipissing district, to J. J. McFadden, of Renfrew. Tenders were asked by the Ontario Government for the pine on the limits, and the sale was concluded.

HOWE RULE

Is the movement that commenced with the demand for home rule for Ireland to result in the establishment of independent legislatures for the Emerald Isle, England and Scotland? Will the next five years see Westminster reconstructed as a federal parliament?

First came the clamor for home rule for Ireland. Knowledge of the fruits of that clamor is world-wide. If the present British Government remains in office long enough it is possible that Ireland may get its own legislature. Then, during the present session of the British house, there has been introduced a measure granting home rule to Scotland on much the same basis as the Irish proposal. The bill has passed its second reading and it will not be at all surprising if Scotland has its legislature even before Ireland has one.

To clap the climax, a strong sentiment in favor of a legislature, independent of parliament is growing in England. The tendency toward devolution is very marked. Strong supporters of the Asquith Government are convinced that individual legislatures will solve at one stroke the constitutional difficulties which now embarass the government.

Ireland and Scotland may to a large extent embrace the suggestion warmly, but is is hard to picture an Englishman who would consider a Government as such, unless it had its home in Westminster.

THE NEW PARCEL POST SYSTEM

One of the most important and progressive pieces of legislation which has been put on the statute books for years and which will mean much for the people of Canada was introduced by Hon. L. P. Pelletier during the closing days of the session. The bill provides for the establishment of a system of parcels post in Canada. There has for years been an agitation for such a measure, but it was always turned down by the old Government and the passing of this measure is a great step in advance.

Mr. Pelletier in introducing the bill explained the plan of the government. It has been decided to fix the weight limit of parcels at eleven pounds and seventy-two inches would be the maximum of length and girth combined. It had been decided to introduce the zone system but on simpler and less complicated lines than in the United States. Each of the provinces would be regarded as a zone but the three Maritime Provinces would be combined to form one zone.

The first zone of all would be within a radius of twenty miles of the point where the parcel is posted irrespective of provincial boundaries. That would give protection to local dealers and country merchants against the departmental stores in the large cities.

The second zone will be outside the twenty mile radius but within the boundary of the province. The other zones will be constituted by the various provinces the Maritime being combined.

The Government intends to establish as cheap rates as possible although it is the intention to make the system self-sustaining and to put it on a business basis. It is the intention to put the system into force by January 1, 1914, but perhaps before.

Catarrh or Colds Never Quickly Cured By Swallowing Drugs

Cough Syrup, Tablets, etc., go to the Stomach, Perhaps Sicken It, But Don't Kill the Germs of Catarrh.

The Direct Breathing Cure is Best.

To cure an ailment in the throat or chest, to rout out Catarrh or Asthma it is essential that the medicine be conveyed direct to the affected parts This is why no other remedy has achieved such world-wide success as Catarrhozone, which alone can be breathed in one second to every air cell in the breathing organs. The healing vapors of Catarrhozone mix with the breath and descend through the throat, down the bronchial tubes, to the deepest air cells in the lungs—all parts are saturated with the rich piney essences that ease, heal and cure.

"No one ever contracted a more obstinate attack of nasal catarrh than I suffered a month ago" writes Mr. G. E. Root, a well known resident of Bridgetown, W. I. "My head ached terrifically, I sneezed about every three minutes, but still my nostrils were entirely closed and I couldn't breathe through them. Ten minutes inhaling Catarrhozone gave me a little relief so I continued to use Catarrhozone every hour, and before the day was out I had improved. Catarrhozone quickly cures me. I am well ever since."

There is no remedy so certain and safe as Catarrhozone, but being a good remedy it is imitated. Beware of the substitutor. Large Catarrhozone lasts two months, price $1.00; smaller sizes 25c and 50c. At all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

THE POEM, "WAITING."

I quote below a few lines of a poem, which I should like to read in its entirety. If it is too long to print in Poet's Column, will you kindly state who the author is and where I can find it, and oblige.

"Serene, I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind, nor tide, nor sea;
I rave no more gainst Time nor Fate
For lo! my own shall come to me."

STUDENT.

Peterborough, Ont., June 4.

The poem is called "Waiting," and was written by John Burroughs. It follows:

Serene, I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind, or tide, or sea;
I rave no more 'gainst Time or Fate,
For lo! my own shall come to me.

I stay my haste, I make delays
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the enternal ways,
And what is mine shall know my face.

Asleep, awake, by night or day,
The friends I seek are seeking me;
No wind can drive my bark astray,
Nor change the tide of destiny.

What matter if I stand alone?
I wait with joy the coming years;
My heart shall reap where it hath sown
And garner up its fruit of tears.

The waters know their own and draw
The brook that springs in yonder height
So flows the good with equal law
Unto the soul of pure delight.
The stars come nightly to the sky,

REVIVAL OF THE FAN

Has Not Been in Fashion Since the Revolution

A revival of the fan is talked of. The fan fell into disuse at the time of the French Revolution and has never quite recovered its away, though it has been in and out of fashion many times since then.

Things are, says a famous fan maker of the present day, looking brighter and prophecies of a revival of the art are not without visible proof in the increasing numbers of hand-painted and lace fans now being sold.

Queen Mary's taste in fans is widely known, as is also that of Queen Alexandra. One by one the old fans are reappearing from the wardrobes and presses where they were carefully laid by our great-grandmothers.

Of the modern fans some of the newest are of hand-made lace, usually Brussels point, with a hand-painted gauze medallion. The novelty lies in the fact that the reverse carries the idea worked out in the design on the front.

Life Story of Captain Scott

[illegible] Captain Robert Falcon [illegible] C. V. O., the leader of [illegible] expedition, was [illegible] Devonport, the famous naval [illegible] south coast of England [illegible]. He was the son of [illegible] John Edward Scott of Devon[illegible]. He was educated at Stubbington House, [illegible]. He entered the British navy at the age of fourteen and five years later became a lieutenant on the Rover and later on the Amphion. In 1898 he was promoted to be torpedo lieutenant of the flagship Majestic of the channel squadron. In 1899 he was made first lieutenant and in the following year he was gazetted commander.

First Expedition

In 1901 he was chosen to lead the British expedition to the Antarctic which occupied him until 1904, at the close of which he was made captain and a companion of the Victorian Order, as a token of King Edward's appreciation of his services in exploration and scientific research. He was also elected a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. The medals of the Royal Geographical Society, the Scottish Royal Geographical Society and the American, Swedish, Danish, Philadelphia and Antwerp Geographical Societies were also conferred on him for this expedition, and the universities of Manchester and Cambridge conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Science.

Shackleton With Him Once

Capt. Scott's earlier attempt at polar exploration was made on the ship Discovery, a Dundee wooden boat of 700 tons, liberally financed by the British government. One of the officers under Capt. Scott in this expedition was Lieut. Shackleton, R. N. R., now Sir Ernest Shackleton, whose experiences with that expedition paved the way for his "Farthest South" expedition five years later. He explored more than 400 miles of the Great Antarctic Barrier, a wider stretch than any other Antarctic explorer.

Sailing from New Zealand on Christmas Eve, 1901, the Discovery ran down to the Great Antarctic Barrier, which Borchgrevink's expedition had noted thirty miles south of where it was recorded by the Ross expedition in 1842. Scott confirmed Borchgrevink's findings, but Scott discovered, where Ross had noted only an "appearance," a wide stretch of country, which he named King Edward VII. Land.

Went South on Sledges

The discovery was laid up in McMurdo Sound, in latitude 77 degrees east, and exploration was started on sledges. The outward journey of 380 miles to latitude 82 degrees and 17 minutes south, occupied fifty-nine days. A little further south two peaks, Mount Markham and Mount Longstaff, named after the chief promoters of the expedition, were sighted. On Nov. 30, Capt. Scott discovered a distance of 300 miles westward from the ship, reaching latitude 77 degrees 59 minutes south, and longitude 146 degrees 33 minutes east.

On Christmas Day, Capt. Scott returned to the Discovery, and on Jan. 5th, 1904, the Terra Nova, the ship with which Capt. Scott made his last Antarctic expedition, arrived with orders for an immediate return, even at the cost of abandoning the Discovery. The expedition ship, however, broke loose from the ice on Feb. 16th, and Capt. Scott had the satisfaction of taking her home in good order.

In 1908 Capt. Scott married Miss Kathleen Bruce, daughter of the late Canon Lloyd Bruce. He was the author of "The Voyage of the Discovery," published in 1905. He was a member of the Naval and Military and the Marlborough Clubs, and lived at 174 Buckingham Palace road, S. W., London.

POLAR TRAGEDIES

Sir John Franklin, of the English navy, in 1845-1848, seeking the northwest passage, lost his ships, the Erebus and the Terror, off King William Land and starved and froze to death with 128 men, forming the crews of both ships.

Captain George Washington De Long, U.S. navy, in 1879-1881, seeking the North Pole, lost his vessel, the Jeannette, off Siberia and then perished near the mouth of the Lena river with twenty of his thirty-two men.

Lieutenant Adolphus Washington Greely, U.S.A., in 1881-1884, in polar research around Lady Franklin Bay, was not found by relief ships and lost eighteen of his twenty-four men by starvation and disease at a winter hut at Cape Sabine.

Salomon Auguste Andree, of Sweden, in 1897, seeking passage to the North Pole by balloon, disappeared into the north from Spitzbergen and was lost, with two companions.

Mylius Erichsen, of Denmark, in 1907, charted the northeast corner of Greenland and perished with two companions while trying to get back to his base of supplies.

Captain Robert Falcon Scott and four companions, after visiting the South Pole in January, 1912, perished in a blizzard while returning north in March, 1912, within eleven miles from One Ton Depot. They had run out of fuel and provisions.

Carmangay

"The Star of Alberta"

PAST The splendidly strategic site of Carmangay was discovered by a far seeing, shrewd railway engineer attracted to the district by the lure of the finest wheat in the Canadian West. He snapped up lands where the wide canyons of the Little Bow River narrows to a point. Here must all railways cross. The C. P. R. came and the shipping centre created went ahead by leaps and bounds.

PRESENT Carmangay today is a thriving incorporated town, with not less than 53 business places. Her up-to-date electric and natural water supply systems are owned and operated by the people. Carmangay boasts an eight-roomed schoolhouse, two banks and four big elevators, shipping over a million bushels in 1911 and 1½ millions in 1912. Carmangay has coal mines operating, and the entire district is underlaid with coal of finest Galt quality.

FUTURE Carmangay grows as Alberta grows. That means a wonderful future. Four new railroads are heading for Carmangay. Four new elevators are trying to cope with the tremendous wheat yields of the district. The mines are opening up splendid prospects. Carmangay is being rapidly developed into one of the greatest towns in the Canadian West. YOU can just as confidently invest in Carmangay as her own people do, who are building in brick and stone for a tremendous future. Carmangay has her own supply of finest brick clay and stone right at her doors, and will soon supply her sister cities in Alberta.

BASEBALL.

Providence, R. I., June 11.—Walter H. Snell, captain and catcher of the Brown University baseball team, signed Saturday with the Philadelphia club of the American League. He will report June 20. During his four years at Brown, Snell has batted 300 and missed only two full games.

New York, June 20.—Manager Chance, of the Highlanders, Saturday rid his team of alittle excess baggage. He sent Pitcher Klepfer and Clark to the Jersey City Skeeters.

Chicago, June 11.—Ty Cobb of the Detroit Americans has increased his batting average to .450 and retains the title of premier of both major leagues, according to unofficial figures given out Saturday:

Joe Jackson of Cleveland is second in the American League, with an average of .439, while Eddie Collins of Philadelphia is third, with .387.

Tris Speaker of Boston is fourth on the list, his record being .381. Nineteen players are batting over the .300 mark.

In the National League 18 players are batting over the .300 mark, with C. McDonald of Boston leading with a mark of .450. Cravath of Philadelphia is second, with .411; Wagner of Pittsburg third, with .362, and Hyatt, Pittsburg, fourth, with .360.

ATHLETICS.

Tacoma, Wash., June 11.—In the State interscholastic track meet here Albert Crane, of Tacoma, broke the American interscholastic record for the high jump. He cleared the bar at 6 feet 2¼ inches.

RING.

New York, June 11.—Gunboat Smith walked into an ice cream parlor at Sixty-sixth street and Broadway one night wearing a dinky little cap and a smile a foot wide.

"Say," said Gunboat to the girl behind the counter, "give me one of them strawberry ice cream sodas—a high one; I'm all het up!"

While the fountain was fizzing Gunboat went on:

"I had a fine time tonight. Went up to see my girl. She's a cook for some people in one of those swell apartment hotels. Gee! When I got into the lobby I couldn't do anything but lamp around. Brussels carpet on the floor so thick I sunk to my ankles every step. Swell mahogany furniture and gold leaf plastered all over the walls. Lot ofcoons in uniforms like a bunch of admirals in the navy. They's lampin' at me like I was a burglar.

"I goes over to the biggest coon and tells him who I want to see. He don't know the party. They escort me over to a hall and start to shoo me out the back way. One coon grabbed me and that made me mad. So I took him by the collar and bumped him on the wall 'till he told me where the girl lived.

"Holy cat! Her and me hadn't been talking a minute when there's a noise out in the hall like a Jap army raiding a bakery. My girl went out and come back in a couple of shakes as white as a ghost. 'Oh, what'll I do?' she says. 'All those coons are out there waiting for you. They're going to kill you.' So all of a sudden I remembered I had important business downtown, and I started. In the hall all the coons was lined up, and the biggest coon was in the middle waving his right hand behind his back. I walked up to him and just as he pulled out a club like a ball bat I walloped him. If he'd ever hit me with that club he'd a murdered me! I chased him into the lobby and cornered him in the elevator, with the other coons tugging on to me. He was trying to start the elevator. I just walloped him again and took the club away, and he turned and ran out the front door and down the street. I ran after him and the rest were diving into areaways to get out of my track. I chased the coon four blocks, waving the club at his nut and just missing him, and he ducked into a hallway and ran upstairs.

"I turned around and started to walk downtown, and I'd gone four blocks more before I noticed that I was swinging that club in my hand like a big gorilla and that I'd lost my hat and umbrella."

IN BAFFIN'S LAND

Nine Months of Winter and Grows Only Moss and Shrubs

Baffin's Land, that bleak, rugged wilderness in the Arctic seas, and the Eskimos which inhabit it, was the subject of an illustrated address by Rev. A. M. Fleming, a missionary for some time in that country. He spoke simply as a missionary, not as an explorer. That it is an inhospitable country with nothing to attract the white man or sustain him if he should venture into it, no one could doubt after Mr. Fleming had finished his lecture. It was simply a stretch of land, a wilderness fit for the Eskimo only, a race peculiarly adapted to living there.

There are only two seasons of the year, three months of summer and nine months of winter. The only vegetation is the moss that covers the hills for a few months, a few flowers and some stray shrubs.

The inhabitants, Mr. Fleming said, are a hardy, degraded race, with primitive instincts. Their igloos are full of filth all the year round. They are quite willing to learn and take up almost any religion, contending that their belief is not the only belief. However, the idea that the Eskimo was hostile to the white man was quite true, as most of the whalers and traders had done nothing but injure him; but once he learned that the white race could be friendly, he was the most generous person in the world.

In stature they are small, all of them under four feet ten inches, and have a copper color, Mr. Fleming thinks, to lack of water there more than anything else.

VALUE OF ATHLETICS

Dr. McKenzie Believes They Prolong Life and Good Health

Replying to the statement that athletes die young, Dr. R. Tait McKenzie of the University of Pennsylvania and formerly of McGill, one of the most noted men in the world on physical development, said: "I have statistics of the men who have won their 'Y' at Yale, the oarsmen at Harvard for many years, the track and field men of Oxford and Cambridge, many club runners, jumpers and vaulters, and they prove past all doubt that the athlete lives longer than the average man. Insurance companies, the closest tabulators of facts, assert that the athlete outlives the average man. Now and then a sprinter dies at 30 from heart trouble, but he would probably have died at 25 had he not taken up athletics. I am firmly in favor of athletics as a prolonger of life, health and manhood, and a general benefit to all communities."

AN AMUSING FAN

Eyes Roll in Face as It is Waved Back and Forth

This is not the open season for fans, but that designed by a New York man is interesting and unusual enough for comment. It is a fan bearing a man's or woman's face with the eyes so arranged that they roll about as it is operated. The face is stamped on the main portion of the fan and is provided with eye openings. Pivoted to the back is a triangular piece of cardboard with eyes on it that register with the openings already mentioned. As this movable strip is shoved from side to side the eyes appear to roll about in the head, producing a weird and laughable effect. Or the flap can remain centered and the motion of the fan will cause it to recede and advance, making the eyes fade away, as if closing, or become prominent, as if just opening.

THE CANADIAN OYSTER

It is Declared to Be the Finest in the World.

It is worthy of note that the Canadian oyster is the finest in the world. And yet Canadians are not making the best of their opportunities in the direction of oyster culture. In a report Earnest Kemp, oyster expert, says on this subject: "Another season has passed and no arrangements have been arrived at with regard to leasing barren bottoms for the purpose of cultivating oysters, to those persons who would like to venture into this industry. Our oysters and natural beds are slowly but surely decreasing and something must be done to counteract and check the loss sustained. The greatest wonder is that under prevailing circumstances our natural beds have stood the strain so long. The loss is not only from excessive fishing, for when once an area has been raided by the farmers, they utterly destroy the bed for future use. What puzzles me is that while there are so many thousands of acres of useless land under the sea which could be made revenue-producing by royalties from their lease for oyster cultivation, a number of persons anxious to go into the business are deprived of the opportunity of thus making a living or increasing their income, simply for want of an amicable arrangement between the federal and provincial governments. When we look around at all the other countries where oyster cultivation is carried on, and see how their trade is increasing, does it not make us feel as if we are debarred from a privilege that every citizen is justy entitled to?"

Workmen's Hair Cutting

The hairdressers of Dowlais and Penydarren, Wales, are agitating against a rather peculiar practice on the part of the workmen employed at the Dowlais Works and the Dowlais Collieries. The workmen cut each other's hair; in some cases a charge of 4 cents is made, while in other cases there is a reciprocal contract. The various trade unions to which the workmen belong are being appealed to.

An Ancient Loaf

The discovery in Sweden of a loaf of bread made from pea flour in the time of the Vikings has disclosed the fact that peas were cultivated in Europe more than 1000 years ago.

AUNT HANNAH'S ONE HOBBY

Old Lady, Restricted All Her Life, Meant to Use Her Money as She Liked.

After being poor all her life, Aunt Hannah had come into property. It was not much from some people's standpoint, only $1,000, but from Aunt Hannah's standpoint it was a fortune. Considering previous deprivations, she held her head pretty level. Her only extravagance was telegrams. She sent half a dozen of them every day—great, long telegrams running to as high as 100 words. Their cost began to make inroads even on $1,000. A prospective heir felt constrained to remonstrate against the needless expense.

"If you must telegraph to all those people," he said, "you ought to try to keep it down to ten words."

Aunt Hannah displayed the first real emotion of years.

"Ten words!" she retorted. "That is just what I will not do. All my life I have been restricted to ten-word telegrams. I have never sent many, for people as poor as I have always been have nobody to telegraph to nor nothing to telegraph about, but whenever I did telegraph I had to do it in ten words. The meanness of it was awful. I ached to add just two or three words, but I couldn't afford it. I envied the rich their telegrams. I often read them in the newspapers, those in divorce suits and breach-of-promise cases in particular. Telegrams as long as a letter those people sent. I'd have been willing to figure in a lawsuit just to send one of them. I am rich now, middling, so I telegraph. Don't argue that it's silly. Maybe it is, but it is harmless."

Fashion in China.

The Chinese have always had a "philosophy of clothes;" their garments are symbolic. Consequently, if a Chinaman is a revolutionist, and wishes to express his frankest criticism of the old regime and to indicate that he is open as day to all the influences of the west, he cuts off his queue, steps into a little tailor's shop and orders a straw hat, a celluloid collar and a pair of cuffs, colored socks, a safety razor and a pair of American boots. These modes of Europe are China's "dernier cri." So much so that the "tailors' shops producing crude semi-foreign apparel," which here (according to the British consular reports) "spring up in almost every important street," are inundated with orders to supply "outward manifestations of a progressive spirit," and the local agents of British sewing machines are not able to supply fast enough the machines required to keep pace with the demand.

HIT BY BALL BAT; BARKS LIKE DOG

Fred. Saunders, of Shamokin, Pa., was brought to the Philadelphia Hospital to be cured of a nervous trouble that for twenty-seven years caused him to bark and yelp like a dog, and paw the ground with his feet. "Fritz" Saunders, as he is known in Shamokin, was stricken with the terrible affliction when only seven years old. Like most boys he had a mania for baseball. One day when Jack Stivitts, once a famous pitcher, was playing in a game at Ashland, Pa., the bat slipped from Stivitts' hand, it struck Saunders over the left eye, knocking him unconscious. When he came to several minutes later, Saunders started to barking and yelping like a dog and speaking in a convulsive manner. He has never recovered. He is free from the malady only when asleep. Efforts to treat him have failed. It is thought the blow caused a blood clot over the nerve centre.

Two Lives for a Dog

How two women lost their lives in an attempt to save a collie dog from drowning was related at the inquest at Rhos-on-Sea, Wales, on Elizabeth Gaskill, aged fifty-four, and Jennie Robinson, twenty, both of Kendal, Westmoreland. The collie, a magnificent dog, disliked the water, but they induced it to enter at a time of exceptionally high tide. Seeing that it was in danger they ran to some steps leading from the promenade to the beach, and were submerged by a great wave. The backwash carried them out to sea. Constable Paul Roberts and Scoutmaster Butler were nearly drowned in a gallant attempt at reslue.

Emblematic Seal Wanted

At a meeting of the Thurles, Ireland, Urban Council, when the question of providing a seal for the council was being discussed, Mr. Murphy, rising from his seat, said, dramatically: "Let it be one with the harp and shamrock." Mr. M'Cormack: "And paint it green." Mr. Murphy gave notice of his intention to propose that a seal with a harp and shamrock be procured.

MUNICIPAL FORMS ALWAYS IN STOCK

SYNOPSIS OF DOMINION LAND REGULATIONS

ANY person who is sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. The applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-agency for the district. Entry by proxy may be made at any agency, on certain conditions by father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister of intending homesteader.

Duties.—Six months' residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, solely owned and occupied by him or by his father, mother, son, daughter, brother, or sister.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties.—Must reside upon the homestead or pre-emption six months in each of six years from date of homestead entry (including the time required to earn homestead patent) and cultivate fifty acres extra.

A homesteader who has exhausted his homestead right and cannot obtain a pre-emption may enter for a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties.—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate fifty acres and erect a house worth $300.00.

Section No. 1.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned and marked "Tender for Section No. 1, Welland Ship Canal," will be received at this office until 16 o'clock on Thursday, July 17th, 1913.

Plans, Specifications and form of contract to be entered into can be seen on or after June 4th, at the office of the Chief Engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, and at the office of the Engineer in Charge, St. Catharines, Ontario.

Copies of plans, and specifications may be obtained from the Department on the payment of the sum of fifty dollars. To bona fide tenderers this amount will be refunded upon the return of the above in good condition.

Parties tendering will be required to accept the fair wages schedule prepared or to be prepared by the Department of Labour, which schedule will form part of the contract.

Contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made strictly in accordance with the printed forms, and in the case of firms, unless there are attached the actual signature, the nature of the occupation, and place of residence of each member of the firm.

An accepted bank cheque for the sum of $200,000.00 made payable to the order of the Minister of Railways and Canals, must accompany each tender, which sum will be forfeited if the party tendering declines entering into contract for the work, at the rates stated in the offer submitted.

The cheque thus sent in will be returned to the respective contractors whose tenders are not accepted.

The cheque of the successful tenderer will be held as security, or part security, for the due fulfilment of the contract to be entered into.

The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

DARING COSSACK MAID

Enrolled a Regiment of Men Hoping to Invade Persia

Mirza Poltyjaeff, a good looking young Cossack woman of South Russia was frustrated in her plans to take a Cossack regiment into Persia.

Having collected her men—all young Cossacks who knew how to shoot and fight—she wrote a letter to the local Ataman, or Cossack chief, for a passport to leave the country, saying:

"As a Cossack born and bred I can no longer bear the disorder that reigns in Persia and therefore have raised a regiment of Cossacks to go and put down the anarchy there. I hope you will allow us to march as soon as possible."

Her disappointment was intense when the Ataman refused her request, saying that there would be international complications if she invaded Persia. But he showed much sympathy with her true Cossack spirit. She continued drilling her men in hope of being allowed to go at a later date. When drilling she wears short skirts and a conical fur cap.

She is a crack shot and can ride as well as any Cossack in the Czar's army, knowing also the trick of riding when lashed to the horse's girth—a good way of entering the enemy's lines unseen. She can ride head down, bare-back or any other way, which is not surprising, as she belongs to the best riders in the world. Her age is twenty-three and her religion Mohammedan-Tartar. All her life she has lived in a tent and thinks koumiss (fermented donkey milk) the greatest delicacy in the world.

BLACKSMITH'S RISE

From the Forge to High Position in Roman Catholic Church

Archbishop McNiel, of Toronto, rose to his high office from the humble stepping-stone of the blacksmith's forge.

He is descended from the McNeils of Barra, the Highland clan whose battle-cry was "Victory or death." The clan claims descent from Neil Og, who fought at Bannockburn, and was granted lands by Robert Bruce. The last McNeil of Barra, Major-General M'Neil, died in England in 1863.

The Archbishop, on his mother's side, is Irish. Her home was in County Kilkenny. In his youth Archbishop McNeil worked at his father's trade in his native town in Nova Scotia. He studied so diligently, however, that he was brought to the notice of the parish priest, who helped him to college, and thus to the priesthood.

He became in succession head of St. Francis College, Bishop of St. Gregory's, and Archbishop of Vancouver, while in Newfoundland he travelled hundreds of miles from mission to mission, on pack-horses and on foot, in all kinds of weather. He is an astronomer and a profound mathematician.

FISHING LAWS RESCINDED

Efforts to Secure Parent Fish Unsuccessful in Part of Georgian Bay

An order-in-Council was passed at Ottawa rescinding a regulation passed a couple of years ago setting apart the waters of Georgian Bay from Grondine Point to the mouth of the French River during October and November of each year for the purpose of securing fish eggs for hatcheries. The change was made because efforts to secure parent fish in the waters affected were unsuccessful, and because the regulation cut off one month from the open season covered by provincial fishing licenses.

MONEY FLEW FAST

Over Half a Million Dollars Changes Hands in Less Than Hour

What probably establishes a new record for real estate sales was made at the auction of Provincial Government lots in Prince Rupert. During the first 45 minutes over $500,000 in sales was recorded. The total amount realised on 282 lots was just $1,131,860; the highest price obtained being $58,000 and the lowest $505.

Coast to Coast Highway

The first sign-post of the Transcontinental highway was planted in the town of Alberni, on the west coast of Vancouver Island. The Canadian Highway Association, which is responsible for the inauguration of the idea of a highway from coast to coast was formed at New Westminster B. C., and in the words of its president, "From now on the route of the Canadian Highway is eastward, with Halifax as its destination."

She stretched out her hand toward him, which Thorne clasped closely again.

"But it wasn't a mistake, and I must go," he said slowly, rising to his feet once more, but still holding her hand.

"Is it something dangerous?" asked the girl apprehensively.

"Oh, well, enough to make it interesting."

But Edith did not respond to his well simulated humor. She drew her hand away, and Thorne fancied with a leap of his heart that she did it with reluctance. She began softly:

"Don't be angry with me if I ask you again about your orders. I must know."

"But why?" asked Thorne curiously.

"No matter, tell me."

"I can't do that. I wish I could," he answered with a slight sigh.

"You needn't," said the girl triumphantly; "I do know."

The captain started and, in spite of his control, a look of dismay and apprehension flitted across his face as the girl went on:

"They're sending you on some mission where death is almost certain. They will sacrifice your life, because they know you are fearless and will do anything. There is a chance for you to stay here, and be just as much use, and I am going to ask you to take it. It isn't your life alone—there are—others to think of and—that's why I ask you. It may not sound well, perhaps I ought not—you won't understand but you—"

As she spoke she rose to her feet, confronting him, while she impulsively thrust out her hand toward him again. Once more he took that beloved hand in his own, holding it close against him. Burning avowals sprang to his lips, and the color flamed into her face as she stood motionless and expectant, looking at him. She had gone as far as a modest woman might. Now the initiative was his. She could only wait.

"No," said the man at last, by the exercise of the most iron self-control and repression, "you shall not have this against me, too."

Edith drew closer to him, leaving her hand in his as she placed her other on his shoulder. She thought she knew what he would have said. And love gave her courage. The frankness of war was in the air. If this man left her now, she might never see him again. She was a woman, but she could not let him go without an effort.

"Against you! What against you? What do you mean?" she asked softly.

The witchery of the hour was upon him, too, and the sweetness of her presence. He knew he had but to speak to receive his answer, to summon the fortress and receive the surrender. Her eyes dropped before his passionately searching look, her color came and went, her bosom rose and fell. She thought he must certainly hear the wild beating of her heart. He pressed her hands closely to his breast for a moment, but quickly pulled himself together again.

"I must go," he said hoarsely; "my business is—elsewhere. I ought never to have seen you or spoken to you, but I had to come to this house and you were here, and how could I help it? Oh—I couldn't for my whole—it's only you in this—" He stopped and thrust her hands away from him blindly and turned away. As there was a God above him he would not do it. "Your mother—I would like to say good-bye to her."

"No, you are not going," cried the girl desperately, playing her last card. "Listen, they need you in Richmond; the president told me so himself—your orders are to stay here. You are to be given a special commission on the war department telegraph service, and you—"

"No, no, I won't take it—I can't take it, Miss Varney."

"Can't you do that much for—me?" said the girl with winning sweetness, and again she put out her hands to him.

"It is for you that I will do nothing of the kind," he answered quickly; "if you ever think of me again after—well, when I am gone, remember that I refused."

"But you can't refuse; it is the president's desire, it is his order, you have got to obey. Wait a moment, I left it upstairs. I will fetch it for you and you will see."

She turned toward the door.

"No," said Thorne, "don't get it, I won't look at it."

WINNIPEG.

Jan. 22, 1912.

Dear Sirs.—

It is just one year ago that we put in the first stock of SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES CURE, and we wish to state that we have been amazed at the remarkable sale of these remedies. We have had many repeat orders in both our stores and have sold retail $1000.00 worth of these remedies. In spite of all these sales we have yet to hear of one dissatisfied customer, while many have come back to tell us of the wonderful cures resulting from the Medicine.

Another striking feature of this business is that so many customers come in stating that SANOL has cured Mr.—— their intimate friend, and they wished to try it for themselves.

Wishing you continued success, we are, Yours truly,

ANDREW'S DRUG STORE,

He Made No Effort at Departure.

"But you must see what it is. It puts you at the head of everything. You have entire control. When you see it I know you will accept it. Please wait."

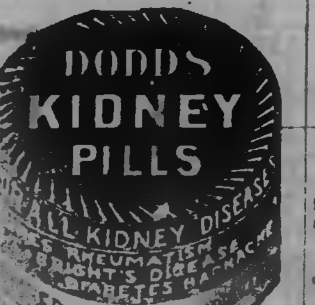
"No, Miss Varney, I can't—"

"Oh, yes, you can," cried Edith, who would hear no denial as she ran swiftly toward the door.

CHAPTER IV.

Miss Mitford's Intervention.

The captain stared after her departing figure; he listened to her footfall on the stair, and then came to an instant resolution. He would take advantage of her opportune withdrawal. He turned back to the table, seized his hat, and started for the door, only to come face to face with another charming young woman, who stood breathless before him to his great and ill-concealed annoyance. Yet the newcomer was pretty enough and young enough and sweet enough to give any man pause for the sheer pleasure of looking at her, to say nothing of speaking to her.



The resources of an ancient wardrobe, that looked as though it had belonged to her great-grandmother, had been called upon for a costume which was quaint and old-fashioned and altogether lovely. She was evidently much younger than Edith Varney, perhaps just sixteen, Wilfred's age. With outstretched arms she barred the door completely, and Thorne, of course, came to an abrupt stop.

"Oh, good evening," she panted, as soon as she found speech; she had run without stopping from her house across the street.

"Good evening, Miss Mitford," he answered, stepping to one side to let her pass, but through calculation or chance she kept her position at the door.

"How lucky this is!" she continued. "You are the very person I wanted to see. Let's sit down and then I'll tell you all about it. Goodness me, I am all out of breath just running over from our house."

Thorne did not accept her invitation, but stood looking at her. An idea came to him.

"Miss Mitford," he said at last, stepping toward her, "will you do something for me?"

"Of course I will."

"Thank you very much, indeed. Just tell Miss Varney when she comes down—just say good night for me and tell her that I've gone."

"I wouldn't do such a thing for the wide, wide world," returned Caroline Mitford in pretended astonishment.

"Why not?"

"It would be a wicked, dreadful story, because you wouldn't be gone."

"I am sorry you look at it that way," said Thorne, "because I am going. Good night, Miss Mitford."

But before he could leave the room, the girl, who was as light on her feet as a fairy, caught him by the arm.

"No—you don't seem to understand. I've got something to say to you."

"Yes, I know," said Thorne; "but some other time."

"No, now."

Of course, he could have freed himself by the use of a little force, but such a thing was not to be thought of. Everything conspired to keep him when his duty called him away, he thought quickly.

"There isn't any other time," said Caroline. "It is tonight. We are going to have a Starvation party."

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Thorne; "another!"

"Yes we are."

"I can't see how it concerns me."

"It is going to be over at our house, and we expect you in half an hour."

"I shouldn't think you would want to play at this time."

"We are not going to play. We are going to make bandages and sandbags and—"

"You won't need me."

"Yes, you can tell us the best way to—"

"Thank you, Miss Mitford, I can't come. I have my orders and I am leaving tonight."

"Now, that won't do at all," said the girl, pouting. "You went to Mamie Jones' party; I don't see why you should treat me like this."

"Mamie Jones!" said Thorne. "Why, that was last Thursday, and now I have got orders, I tell you, and—"

But Caroline was not to be put off.

"Now, there's no use talking about it," she said vehemently.

"Yes, I see that."

"Didn't you promise to obey orders when I gave them? Well, these are orders."

"Another set," laughed Thorne.

"I don't know anything about any others. These are mine."

"Well, but this time—"

"This time is just the same as all the other times, only worse; besides I told her you would be there."

"What's that?"

"I say she expects you, that's all."

"Who expects me?"

"Why, Edith, of course; who do you suppose I was talking about all this time?"

"Oh, she expects me to—"

"Why, of course, she does. You are to take her over. You needn't stay if you don't want to. Now I will go and tell her you are waiting."

"Oh, very well," said Thorne, smiling; "if she expects me to take her over I will do so, of course, but I can't stay a moment."

"Well," said Caroline, "I thought you would come to your senses some time or another. See here, Mr. Captain, was she most ready?"

"Well, how do I know."

"What dress did she have on?"

"Dress?"

"Oh, you men! Why, she's only got two."

"Yes; well, very likely, this was one of them, Miss Mitford."

"No matter, I am going upstairs to see, anyway. Captain Thorne, you can wait out there on the veranda or, perhaps, it would be pleasanter if you were to smoke a cigar out in the summerhouse at the side of the garden. It is lovely there in the moonlight, and—"

She Barred the Door Completely.

"I know, but if I wait right here—"

"Those are my orders. It's cooler outside, you know, anyway, and—"

"Pardon me, Miss Mitford, orders never have to be explained, you know," interrupted the captain, smiling at the [illegible]

"That's right; I take back the explanation," she said, as Thorne stepped toward the window; "and, captain," cried the girl.

"Yes?"

"Be sure and smoke."

Thorne laughed, as he lighted his cigar and stepped out onto the porch, and thence into the darkness of the garden path.

"Oh," said Caroline to herself, "he is splendid. If Wilfred were only like that!" she pouted. "But then—our engagement's broken off anyway, so what's the difference. If he were like that—I'd— No—I don't think I'd—"

Her soliloquy was broken by the entrance of Mrs. Varney, who came slowly down the room.

"Why, Caroline dear! What are you talking about, all to yourself?"

"O—just—I was just saying, you know—that—why, I don't know what I was— Do you think it is going to rain?" she returned in great confusion.

"Dear me, child; I haven't thought about it. Why, what have you got on? Is that a new dress, and in Richmond?"

"A new dress? Well, I should think so. These are my great-grandmother's mother's wedding clothes. Aren't they lovely? Just in the nick of time, too. I was on my very last rags, or, rather, they were on me, and I didn't know what to do. Mother gave me a key and told me to open an old horsehair trunk in the attic, and these were in it." She seized the corners of her dress and pirouetted a step or two forward to show it off, and then dropped the older woman an elaborate, old-fashioned courtesy. "I ran over to show them to Edith," she resumed. "Where is she? I want her to come over to my house."

"Upstairs, I think. I am afraid she can't come. I have just come from her room," Mrs. Varney continued as Caroline started to interrupt, "and she means to stay there."

"I will see about that," said Caroline, running out of the room.

Mrs. Varney turned and sat down at her desk to write a letter, which evidently, from her sighs, was not an easy task. In a short time the girl was back again. Mrs. Varney looked up from writing and smiled at her.

"You see it was no use, Caroline," she began.

"No use," laughed the girl; "well, you will see. I didn't try to persuade her or argue with her. I just told her that Captain Thorne was waiting for her in the summerhouse. Yes," she continued, as Mrs. Varney looked her astonishment; "he is still here, and he said he would take her over. You just watch which dress she has on when she comes down. Now I will go out there and tell him she'll be down in a minute. I have more trouble getting people fixed so that they can come to my party than it would take to run a blockade into Savannah every fifteen minutes."

Mrs. Varney looked at her departing figure pleasantly for a moment, and then, with a deep sigh, resumed her writing, but she evidently was not to conclude her letter without further interruption, for she had scarcely begun again when Wilfred came into the room with a bundle very loosely done up in heavy brown paper. As his mother glanced toward him he made a violent effort to conceal it under his coat.

"What have you got there, Wilfred?" she asked innocently.

"That? Oh, nothing; it is only—say, mother, have you written that letter yet?"

"No, my dear, I have been too busy. I have been trying to write it, though, since I came down, but I have had one interruption after another. I think I will go into your father's office and do it there." She gathered up her paper and turned to leave the room. "It is a hard letter for me to write, you know," she added as she went away.

Wilfred, evidently much relieved at his mother's departure, took the package from under his coat, put it on the table, and began to undo it. He took from it a pair of very soiled, dilapidated, gray uniform trousers. He had just lifted them up when he heard Caroline's step on the porch, and the next moment she came into the room through the long French window. Wilfred stood petrified with astonishment at the sudden and unexpected appearance of his young beloved, but soon recovered himself and began rolling the package together again, hastily and awkwardly, while Caroline watched him from the window. She coldly scrutinized his confusion while he made his ungainly roll, and, as he moved toward the door, she broke the silence.

"Ah, good evening, Mr. Varney," she said coolly.

"Good evening," he said, his voice as cold as her own.

They both of them had started for the hall door and in another second they would have met.

"Excuse me," said Caroline, "I'm in a hurry."

"That's plain enough. Another party, I suppose, and dancing."

"What of it? What's the matter with dancing, I'd like to know."

"Nothing is the matter with dancing if you want to, but I must say that it is a pretty way of going on, with the cannon roaring not six miles away."

"Well, what do you want us to do? Cry about it? I have cried my eyes out already; that would do a heap of good now, wouldn't it?"

"Oh, I haven't time to talk about such petty details. I have some important matters to attend to," he returned loftily.

"It was you that started it," said the girl.

Wilfred turned suddenly, his manner at once losing its badly assumed lightness.

"Oh, you needn't try to fool me," he reproached her; "I know well enough how you have been carrying on since our engagement was broken off. Half a dozen officers proposing to you—a dozen for all I know."

"What difference does it make?" she retorted pertly. "I haven't got to marry them all, have I?"

"Well, it isn't very nice to go on like that," said Wilfred with an air into which he in vain sought to infuse a detached, judicial, and indifferent appearance. "Proposals by the wholesale!"

"Goodness me!" exclaimed Caroline, "what's the use of talking about it to me. They're the ones that propose, I don't. How can I help it?"

"Oh," said Wilfred loftily, "you can help it all right. You helped it with me."

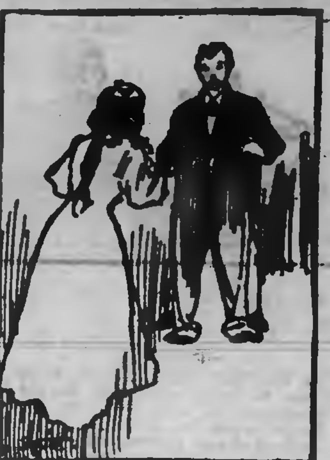
"Well," she answered, with a queer look at him, "that was different."

"And ever since you threw me over—" he began.

"I didn't throw you over, you just went over," she interrupted.

"I went over because you walked off with Major Sillsby that night we were at Drury's Bluff," said the boy, "and you encouraged him to propose. You admit it," he said, as the girl nodded her head.

"Of course I did. I didn't want him hanging around forever, did I? That's the only way to finish them off. What do you want me to do—string a placard around my neck, saying, 'No proposals received here. Apply at the office?' Would that please you any better? Well," she continued, as the boy shrugged his shoulders, "it doesn't make any difference to you what I do, it doesn't even make as much as that to me."



"Cut Those Off," He Said.

"Oh, it doesn't? I think it does, though. You looked as if you enjoyed it pretty well while the Third Virginia was in the city."

"I should think I did," said Caroline ecstatically. "I just love every one of them. They are going to fight for us and die for us, and I love them."

"Why don't you accept one of them before he dies, then, and have done with it? I suppose it will be one of those smart young fellows with a cavalry uniform."

"It will be some kind of a uniform, I can tell you that. It won't be anyone that stays in Richmond."

"Now I see what it was," said Wilfred, looking at her gloomily. "I had to stay in Richmond, and—"

The boy choked up and would not finish.

"Well," said Caroline, "that made a heap of difference. Why, I was the only girl on Franklin street that didn't have a—some one she was engaged to—at the front. Just think what it was to be out of it like that! You have no idea how I suffered; besides, it is our duty to help all we can. There aren't many things a girl can do, but Colonel Woolbridge—he's one of Morgan's men, you know—said that the boys fight twice as well when they have a—sweetheart at home. I couldn't waste an engagement on—"

"And is that why you let them all propose to you?" rejoined the youth bitterly.

"Certainly, it didn't hurt me, and it pleased them. Most of 'em will never come back to it again, and it is our duty to help all we can."

"And you really want to help all you can, do you?" asked Wilfred desperately. "Well, if I were to join the army would you help me—that way?"

This was a direct question. It was the argumentum ad feminam with a vengeance. Caroline hesitated. A swift blush overspread her cheek, but she was game to the core.

"Why, of course I would, if there was anything I—could do," she answered.

"Well, there is something you can do." He unrolled his package and seized the trousers by the waistband and dangled them before her eyes. "Cut those off," he said; "they are twice too long. All you have to do is to cut them here and sew up the ends, so that they don't ravel out."

Caroline stared at him in great bewilderment. She had expected something quite different.

"Why, they are uniform trousers," she said finally. "You are going to join the army?" She clapped her hands gleefully. "Give them to me."

"Hush! don't talk so loud, for heaven's sake," said Wilfred. "I've got a jacket here, too." He drew out of the parcel a small army jacket, a private soldier's coat. "It's nearly a fit. It came from the hospital. Johnny Seldon wore it, but he won't want it any more, you know, and he was just about my size, only his legs were longer. Well," he continued, as the girl continued to look at him strangely, "I thought you said you wanted to help me."

"I certainly do."

"What are you waiting for, then?" asked Wilfred.

The girl took the trousers and dropped on her knees before him.

"Stand still," she said, as she measured the trousers from the waistband to the floor. "That is about the place, isn't it?"

"Yes, just there."

"Wait," she continued, "until I mark it with a pin."

Wilfred stood quietly until the proper length had been ascertained, and then he assisted Caroline to her feet.

"Do you see any scissors about?" she asked in a business-like way.

"I don't believe there are any in the drawing room, but I can get some from the women sewing over there. Wait a moment."

"No, don't," said the girl; "they would want to know what you wanted with them, and then we would have to tell them."

"Yes," said the boy; "and I want to keep this a secret between us."

"When are you going to wear them?"

"As soon as you get them ready."

"But your mother—"

"She knows it. She is going to write to father tonight. She would send it by a special messenger, so we ought to get an answer by tomorrow."

Men Who Don't Exercise

SUFFER FROM INDIGESTION, HEADACHES, POOR APPETITE, SLEEPLESSNESS.

Nothing so Sure to "Set Up" a Man Make Him Fell Brisk and Vigorous, as Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Lack of exercise and overwork were the causes that combined to almost kill Samuel S. Stephens, Jr., one of the best known citizens of Woodstock.

In his convincing letter, Mr. Stephens says:

"A year ago I returned home after a long trip, completely worn out. was so badly affected by chronic biliousness, so much overcome by constant headaches, dizziness, that I despaired of ever getting well.

"It was a blessing that I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills. In one week I felt like a new man. The feeling of weight and nausea in my stomach disappeared. My eyes looked brighter, color grew better, and, best of all, I began to enjoy my meals. The dizziness, langour and feeling of depression passed away, and I fast regained my old-time vigor and spirits. To-day I am well—thanks to Dr. Hamilton's Pills."

For health, strength, comfort and good spirits, there is no medicine like Dr. Hamilton's Pills. 25c. per box, five boxes for $1.00, at all druggists and storekeepers, or by mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Kicked by a Horse.

Mr. Carlos Waller, of the first line of Smith, was kicked on the calf of his leg by his horse. The injury is a severe and painful one and Mr. Waller will be laid up for two or three weeks. Drs. Eastwood and McCulloch attended. Mr. H. Snowden will take charge of Mr. Waller's milk route.

A Steeple-Jack Here.

A couple of steeplejacks are operating in the city. One of them concluded that the city flag pole needed a new coat of paint, and accordingly approached the Property Committee of the City Council with a view of securing the contract, for ten dollars and promised not to use spurs nor injure the pole in any way.

Inspector Thompson to Bat.

Plumbing Inspector Thompson will be asked to submit a report to the Council this evening, explaining why he has neglected to make the smoke test in accordance with the plumbing by-law. Several reports were submitted to the property committee respecting the work of the plumbing department, none of which bore any evidence of a smoke test having been made. "It looks as though he is openly defying us," was Ald. Green's comment.

Poor Little Lindsay.

Lindsay Post: A Peterborough gentleman who was in Lindsay on Monday informed a Post representative that the Great Northern Telegraph Co. was removing their poles off the main street of that city on the understanding that the city would pay them $300. Why Lindsay should be asked to pay $1200 to the company for the removing of twelve poles is something our citizens would like to have explained.

Former Local Man's Success.

Mr. Norman Bell, son of Dr. R. W. Bell, formerly of this city, who for some years was in charge of the Front st. power house of the Toronto Railway Co., and later an Inspector for the Underwriters' Association in that city, has been chosen out of many nominees for the position of Electrical Inspector for the city of Ottawa. Mr. Bell graduated from the test department of the Canadian General Electric Co. of Peterborough and since that time has had a wide experience with electrical plants of all descriptions.

A Terribly Sudden Death.

The sad news reached Peterborough yesterday of the very sudden death of Mr. Godfrey Coughlin, traveller for his father, Mr. John Coughlin, of the Monumental Marble Works, Hunter street. The late Mr. Coughlin went down to Madoc on business on Tuesday and early yesterday he was attacked by a sudden weak spells to which he was subject, death taking place about an hour after he was taken ill. His father and mother left early in the morning to arrange for the body being brought back to Peterborough.

No funeral arrangements have yet been made

Local Powder Magazine.

Mr. Robert Kingan waited upon the Property Committee in regard to the powder magazine. He contended that it was in the city's as well as the public's interest to build a magazine which they would own and control. Ald. Duffus suggested that the matter be taken up with the police department with a view of putting a stop to the practice of carting powder through the streets. It was also decided to obtain information regarding the methods employed by other cities in respect to the storage of powder and the maintenance of powder magazines

BELLEVILLE'S MAYOR WRATH

As the Mayor of Belleville was out for a walk a few days ago, possibly wonderly when and how the Bay City would ever reach Peterborough's population, he saw in the vicinity of the Canadian Northern Ontario bridge near Victoria Park entrance something unexpected. The Dominion Construction Company's employees had been tearing up the roadway south of the piers of the C. N. O. R bridge with their heavy machinery.

The Mayor girded up his loins, put on a frown that would make the stage villian envious and told the men to "Quit!" They quit.

A Local Incinerator.

Mr. A. H. Reid, representing the Reid Incinerator Co., has made an offer to the Property Committee for an incinerator plant for Peterborough. The plant which he agrees to install, is guaranteed to handle 20 tons of refuse a day, and the approximate cost of maintenance, including help, was estimated at 24 cents per ton of garbage consumed. One man would be required to clinker the fires and otherwise look after the plant. Mr. Reid thought that the garbage collecting system in Peterborough would provide sufficient refuse to keep the plant running night and day. Sanitary Inspector Spence estimates that the daily collections will average about ten tons a day.

The matter will be considered in the Council meeting to-night.

BEAUTY DESTROYING HAIRS QUICKLY BANISHED

(The Modern Beauty

It is now an easy matter to quickly and permanently rid the skin of ugly hairy growths without resorting to the painful and expensive electric treatment, merely by using a delatone paste, made by mixing enough delatone with water to cover the hairy surface. This paste should remain on the skin 2 or 3 minutes, then rubbed off and the skin washed. After using delatone the skin will be entirely free from hair or blemish.

Beautiful, lustrous eyebrows will result if pyroxin be rubbed on occasionally, and short, straight eyelashes will come in long, silky and have a delightful curl by applying pyroxin at lash-roots with thumb and forefinger. Use care and don't get any pyroxin where no hair is wanted.

WEDDING BELLS.

Coure — Maynard.

One of the prettiest weddings of the season was quietly solemnized at seven o'clock this morning at the George Street Methodist Church, by the Rev. Mr. Pogue, pastor of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, when Lottie Amelia Coure, youngest daughter of Mr. Wm. Coure, Simcoe St., became the bride of Mr. John William Maynard.

The young couple were unattended and only the immediate friends were present. The bride was given away by her father and looked very pretty in a navy blue broadcloth suit with hat to match and she carried a bouquet of bridal roses.

Mr. and Mrs. Maynard left on a honeymoon to be spent in Toronto, Buffalo, and New York, after which they will take up their residence in the city.

The many friends of Mr. C. Waller, local milk vendor, who reside on the 1st line of Smith, will regret to learn that while attending to his horses last night, he was badly kicked and will be laid up for two or three weeks. Dr. Eastwood and Dr. McCullough were in attendance.

Mr. Bruce Forsythe of Carlyle, Sask., and Mrs. Forsythe, are in the city visiting friends. They were delegates at the Presbyterian Conference in Toronto. This is Mr. Forsythe's first visit to Peterborough since leaving here more than twenty years ago.

DANCED WITH BELLES BUT NOW ARE WAITERS

New Orleans, June 11.—Intending to work their way over a 10,000-mile voyage, making the greater part of the trip as waiters, Ewing Werlein, Gilbert Sanchez, A. Dickerson, Jas. Campbell and Arthur Lestrappes, well-known in local society, shipped as waiters Saturday on the United Fruit Company's steamship Abangarez.

They are bound for Panama, and from there they will ship for New York and thence to Europe.

The "fashionable waiters" danced the last Mardi Gras german and each in turn as led one cotillion at some time in the last few years.

Two other young men from the "fashionable set" had contemplated making the trip, but when they got a glimpse of the passenger list on the Abangarez, and saw that it included the names of several "buds" last season whom they met while "out" this past winter, they decided to postpone their travel around a good part of the globe.

STEAMER ESTURION

This steamer will leave the George street wharf at 1.30 p.m. to-morrow for a trip down the river. She will return to the city about 8.30.

LATE SCANDALS MAY SEND ENGLISH LIBERALS TO OBLIVION

New York American Says Sir Edward Grey's Resignation Was Refused

New York, June 12.—A cablegram to The American from London says Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Minister, has handed his resignation to Premier Asquith, who has refused it. This the New York American correspondent states on high authority.

At the moment Sir Edward has come to no further decision, but it is certain he will resign shortly. He has been Foreign Minister since 1905.

He wishes to withdraw because he considers that the present scandals affecting certain members of the Cabinet reflect indirectly on himself.

One of these is the Marconi scandal; another that developed by the suit for divorce brought by Herbert W. C. Carr-Gomm, Liberal member of Parliament for Rotherhite, against Eliot Chawshay-Williams, Liberal member of Leicester, who has been Parliamentary Secretary to Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd-George.

Name Far Above Suspicion.

The fact is that Sir Edward Grey's name has always been far above suspicion, bue he is unwilling to be associated longer with the present Government.

The Carr-Gomm Chawshay Williams scandal has grown to such proportions that the whole Liberal party fears its consequences. To escape them, Premier Asquith and Chancellor Lloyd-George took an unprecedented step; they ordered Chawshay-Williams to resign his seat in the House, which he has done. This after a stormy scene between the Chancellor and his secretary. Thereupon, Chawshay-Williams wrote to the Leicester Liberal Association a letter and made a most amazing statement.

The Examiner Wrong

The news item in the Examiner of Wednesday,p urporting to make some observations regarding Mr. J. H. Burnham's alleged remarks in the House of Commons, is incorrect. He made no statement about the "red caps" in the Union Station. His remarks referred to an investigation of a few years ago which was fully reported by the Toronto papers at the time.

ORGANIZATION IS FORMED TO OPPOSE CHURCH UNION

Presbyterian Minority Have Strong Financial Backing to Carry on Campaign--Three Millionaire Members of Church Promise Support

Toronto, June 12.—That there will be continued opposition to Church Union within the Presbyterian Church is assured. Last night a meeting of commissioners and delegates opposed to the movement was held in St. Andrew's Institute, and an organization was formed to oppose union. A committee was appointed to nominate officers for separate provincial bodies and complete arrangements for a united opposition. Three millionaires of the Prebyterian Church have made an offer to finance a paper with the object of carrying on such a campaign throughout the Dominion. Dr. Ephrahim Scott, Dr. Sedgewick, Rev. Mr. MacBeth, Rev. G. H. Smith, Rev. Mr. Cunningham and Mr. Walcer Paul are prominent among the members of this organization.

MAY HAVE A SWING IN C. P. R. NEW BRIDGE

Engineer Sing of the Public Works Department Met Council Last Night—Thought it Possible That a Draw Bridge Will be Ordered—Optimistic of Canals' Early Completion

Mr. J. G. Sing, Engineer of the Public Works Department at Ottawa, met the Council last night, by order of his department, and offered that should the C.P.R. double track their line and construct a new bridge over the Otonabee River, the structure should include a swing, to facilitate navigation up to and above The Quaker Oats Co. Mr. Sing offered that his department has already prepared plans for wharves all along the river front from above Hunter street to Dalhousie street, and he had no doubt but what an order-in-council could be secured for a drawbridge in the C.P.R's new structure. Considerable money had been spent by the Government in dredging the river, and there is now a good depth of water along the city front, the utility of which the department do not want blocked by any bridge.

Mr. Sing, in company with as many of the Aldermen as can attend will go over the whole situation this morning.

Mr. Sing was quite optimistic of an early completion of the Canal, which is receiving constant attention by the department, the members of which are keenly alive to the importance of this waterway.

BOTH TWICE MARRIED

Therefore, Says Court, Woman Is Not Bigamist.

Cornwall, Ont., June 12.—Margaret Roach, chargeh with bigamy, was acquitted last evening by a general sessions of the peace jury.

The prisoner was accused of having married Walter James Watkins, of Gouverneur, N.Y., here in September, 1899, and Alexander Lalonde of Cornwall, here in 1901. The defence contended that Watkins was a married man before he married Miss Roach and that therefore her first marriage was voided.

THE ANNUAL CAMP.

The 15th Boys' Camp of the Peterborough Y. M. C. A., will be Held at Sandy Point.

This year the Boys' Camp of the Peterborough Y. M. C. A. promises to be the best in the history of the Association. The camp will be held at Sandy Point, Clear Lake from June 30th to July 12th. And a better time could not have been selected, as the boys will have finished their examination and will be in need of a good rest.

Sandy Point has a good swimming beach, and is noted for its good fishing and boating. It has a good field for baseball and all kinds of sport, and is without doubt, the best tpot on the lake for a Boys' Camp.

The boys will be under the supervision of Mr. J. J. Thompson, the Physical Director of the Y. M. C. A., assitted by leaders of character and ability, who are interested in the development of manly characters in boys.

The purpose of the Camp is to give the boy a good healthy vacation, where he can enjoy nature at its best All boys who intend going to camp would do well to see Mr. Thompson, camp director, or the Boys' Secretary, who will give all necessary information. All applications must be in by the 21st of June, so as to give those in charge time to have everything ready before leaving for the Camp.

GOVERNMENT IS BLAMED FOR MORALS OF CHINESE

Five Hundred Dollar Head Tax Is Scored by Alberta Judge in Quashing Indictment.

Calgary, Alta., June 12.—The Dominion Government is responsible for the alleged immorality of Chinese in Canada because of the five hundred dollar head taff imposed on bringing wives into this country, is the opinion of Mr. Justice Beck of the Supreme Court. He made this statement in connection with quashing an indictment against Hung Lee, charged with gambling.

MOORS DRESS AS WOMEN; KILL: TANGIER IN PANIC

Helpless Terror Prevails in Moroccan City--Consulates Have Extra Guards.

Tangier, Morocco, June 12.—A state of panic prevails at Tetuan, according to late advices from that city, and the resident general has forbidden anyone except the guards on the streets after nine o'clock at night. Moors dressed as women have been stabbing and killin people in the streets in various sections an a lmost helpless terror prevails The Consulates have been supplied with extra guards.

PRINCE ALBERT CUTS OUT THE QUEBEC "AT HOME", AND LEAVES

H. M. S. Cumberland Steamed Out of Harbor at Sun-up--No Reason Given

Quebec, Que., June 12.—H.M.S. Cumberland left Quebec at 5 a.m. today. She was announced to leave to-morrow. but for some reasons that were not made public the date of departure was advanced by one day.

Prince Albert did not attend the "At-home" given yesterbay afternoon by the Quebec Lawn Bowling Club in honor of the officers and Jadets of the Cumberland.

This training ship is going to Gaspe, Sydney, Capre Breton, and St. John, Newfoundland. She will leave St. John on July 2nd for England.

MOST SUCCESSFUL FARMERS MEETING

The annual picnic held under the auspices of the West Peterborough Farmers' Institute was held yesterday at the grove on Mr. T. H. Graham's farm, Smith. There was a large attendance. During the afternoon addresses were delivered by Mr. Elliott of the Farm & Dairy, Mr. Tomkins, Government Instructor at Norwood. Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., Mr. A. E. Peck and Hon. J. R. Stratton.

The officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, Mr. C. E. Moore; Vice-President, Mr. J. A. McGregor; Secretary, Mr. Wm Collins. All the old directors were re-elected.

A most enjoyable time was spent by the large audience present who did justice to the refreshments served by the ladies.

A SIDE LIGHT ON OLD LOCAL HISTORY

Yesterday Mr. John Adlum, one of the city's oldest and most faithful employes, told The Times a little incident in regard to the big Romaine chimney, just overthrown. To avoid prejudice in this little story, it might be noted that it is many years since Mr. Adlum has used intoxicants of any kind.

It seems that some 35 years ago, shortly before and during construction of the big chimney, Mr. Adlum was working for Mr. Romaine at $1 a day, current price for labor in those days. He was first employed at the clay banks, some four miles down the river, where the raw material was loaded on scows for shipment to the works here. One night a scow loaded with clay, for shipment in the morning, sank at her anchorage in front of the banks and the scow is still there now. Again, Mr. Adlum, in telling of the tremendous heat at the kilns here, noted that a young man named W. Payne, in stooping too close to a heated kiln, has his hair entirely singed off. The day the last and topmost brick was put on the chimney, to quote Mr. Adlum, "Mr. Romaine brought I and tother chaps two gallons of beer and told we to drink to his health. Then he chartered a boat and sent we, all us chaps and our families on a picnic to Campbellford. There were lots of grub and seven gallons of beer, and good beer, sir. I tell 'e, sir, them was great days."

BELGIUM WILL SPEND $62,000,000 ON ARMS

Brussels, Belgium, June 12.—The Begian Premier announced in the Senate to-day the intention of the Government to borrow $62,800,000 to cover military expenditures. He said:

"We do not doubt the loyalty of the nations which guarantee our neutrality, but we do not intend meekly to supply again a battle ground for Europe. In the event of the breaking out of war which has been often suggested, it will find Antwerp an impregnable fortress."

A TIMES SUGGESTION HAS BEEN ADOPTED

Our readers will remember that the Times has on several occasions advocated removal af the obsolete useless, and unsightly sheds to the north of the Court House. We are pleased to note that the Grand Jury, submitted the following report ta His Honour Judge Huycke, who is presiding at the General Sessions of the Peace:

His Honour Judge Huycke.

Hon. Sir,—Your Grand Jury have the honour to report and congratulate the court upon the absence of crime, calling for the action of the authorities at this time.

We visited the House of Refuge and found some 33 inmates therein, and have to compliment the management upon the excellent condition of the premises and the evident care bestowed upon the inmates, to ensure their comfort.

The St. Jaseph's Hospital, House of Providence, Nicholls Hospital, and Protestant Home and Children's Shelter have been visited and all evidence of proper care in the various duties astigned to these institutions. The new wing of the House of Providence is completed and is a model of beauty and completeness in every way.

The new wing of the Nicholls Hospital is nearing completion and will permit added accommodation for the treatment of the sick.

The care bestowed upon the court house and jail is noticeable and provision for the prisoners appears to be well considered, but we feel, however, that certain repairs and improvements are very necessary, particularly the unsightly and unsafe conditions of the buildings and fence north of the court house. These are old, and are, as a fire risk a menace to the surroundings. The removal of the fence and buildings and the replacing of the same with more modern equipment, appears a necessity.

The floor of the main building is also in bad repair and should be removed and a new floor laid.

The men's lavatory is inadequate, and should be enlarged and proper provision made for ladies.

The work of decorating and painting the Council Chamber and Jurors' room has been dooe under the supervision of Mr. Nesbitt and a very creditable.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) WILLIAM FERGUSON,
Chairman.

TORONTO'S INCREASED IMMORALITY IS GREATLY DEPLORED BY ALL

Sessions Grand Jury Urges That More Severe Punishments be Meted Out

Toronto, June 12.—Claiming that in their opinion too much time of the court of the General Sessions is given to the consideration of a great number of minor cases, the Grand Jury, in making their presentment to Judge Morgan this afternoon, suggested that in order to remedy this these cases should be disposed of by a magistrate or a county judge direct

The jurors note an increase in public immorality and urge that more severe punishment be meted out to the offenders. They are shocked at the number of instances of people of mature years living together in contempt of the moral sentiment of the community, and it was pointed out to His Honour that only by adopting stringent penalties could it be hoped to eradicate the evil. A law making this offence a criminal one, by such a statute as is found in the Massachusetts Penal Code, is earnestly urged.

Many public institutions were inspected by the Grand Jury, who found them to be in a very satisfactory condition.

ONE CASE OF LASH.

Judge Morgan in replying, lamented the apparent decrease in public morality and pointed out that it could only serve as a bad example to the younger and rising generation. He had been compelled, he went on, to order the lash to be administered to one who had been found guilty. He would, he said, refer the suggestion of the Grand Jury to the Dominion Government, as the Ontario Government did not have the power to consider them.

BASEBALL

The Petes defeated the Ottawa aggregation yesterday on their own grounds. The game was a lightning fast one and Stan. Cresswell pitched a good game for the Petes, while McNeal held him up behind the plate.

The boys were airtight throughout the whole game and shut the Senators out by a score of 2—0.

PARTS OF CENTRE CITY WILL NOW BE OILED

George St. Will be Torn up in a Couple of Weeks for Gas Mains--Council Determined to Relieve the Merchants From the Dust Nuisance

The City Council met in Committee of the Whole last night, Mayor W. H. Bradburn presiding.

Mr. W. A. Cressman wrote asking that a better system of street watering be adopted, in order to protect the merchants from destruction of their goods by dust, as experienced many days this season so far. Mr. Cressman said Peterborough looked more like a village of 1000 inhabitants than a city of 25,000, in regard to dust.

His Worship suggested that some of the Board of Works' appropriation be applied to oiling George street from Charlotte to Brock, anh on Hunter, Simcoe and Charlotte as far as Aylmer street.

Ald. Buller did not object to oiling the streets, but did not know where the money is to come from. No appropriation has been made this year for oil, and he could not see what portion of the Board's appropriation could be cut off for this work.

City Engineer Parson contended that streets properly treated with the right class of oil shauld not need a second application for two or three months.

Ald. Buller considered that were arrangements made with the Street Railway Co. to use a sprinkler on their tracks, the situation wauld be considerably relieved, as the street watering contractors could then devote greater attention to districts not covered by the street railway sprinklers.

While this scheme was considered a good one, it was decided that it is too late this season to enter into such an arrangement, and the oil question was reverted to.

Attention was here drawn to the fact that George street will be dug up in a couple of weeks for gas mains eliminating the need of oiling that thoroughfare, and Ald. Johnston suggested that Brock, Hunter, Simcoe and Charlotte streets be oiled from Water to Aylmer streets.

Ald. Johnston moved, seconded by Ald. Gorhon, that the question of better water George street, and oiling parts of Charlotte, Simcoe, Hunter and Brock streets be left in the hands of Chairman of the Board of Works and the City Engineer to deal with, and that they be authorized to purchase Oil.—Carried.

A Question of Sidings.

The Peter Hamilton Co's and J. J. Turner & Sons' request for sidings into the rear of their properties from the C.P.R. spur line came up for discussion.

His Worship said he would not consent to a siding across King street.

The Peter Hamilton Co. desire the siding to run up Water street along side the rear of their building.

Ald. Gordon moved, seconded by Ald. Green, that this committee recommend Council that the request of the Peter Hamilton Co. for a siding to their premises be granted, the siding where it crosses Sherbrooke street to be planked and maintained planked.—Carried.

Ald. Duncan, Johnston and Langford opposed the motion.

J. J. Turner & Sons' request was not granted.

The Incinerator.

On motion of Ald. Green, Ald. Gillespie be requested to prepare specifications for an incinerator and secure other prices.

The Bridge on London Street.

His Worship reported that as the Quaker Oats apparently will not deviate from their canditions for giving the city a right-of-way over the old London street bridge, the structure will, it seems, be torn down. The Council cannot see its way clear to close up Murray street and Lonhon street, and give the company Mill street and Dickson street south of Hunter.

Ald. Anderson offered that the city should expropriate sufficient property and build a bridge.

This was not considered practicable at present.

A Question of Voting.

On petition of the local option people, the City Solicitor will be instructed to prepare a by-law providing that persons desiring to vote on income qualification shall pay their tax before voting, if such a by-law is legal.

The temperance party contend that at last local option ballot many casting their ballots could not subsequently be found when wanted to pay their income tax. Such conditions, they say, encourages a fraud, the possibility of which should be eliminated in fairness to all parties.

After Thompson's Scalp.

Assistant Plumbing Inspector Thompson reported to council that he had no desire to defie Council and shirk his duties. Before making smoke tests he must have help, a ladder, etc., which had not been provided him.

Ald. Duncan, chairman of the Property Committee, replied that Mr. Thompson had never applieh for help or other accessories for making smoke tests. When he does meet the committee he is under the influence of liquor. The plumbing of this city said Ald Duncan, is not being inspected properly, and vents are not going in the work." I know of a job where there are 16 closets in a row, and instead of each closet having a vent, there is but one vent to the whole sixteen. Thompson was to notify our committee when he was ready to make a smoke test so that we could be present, but he has not done so yet."

Alderman Gordon and Gillespie moved that the Property Committee investigate the work of the Assistant Plumbing Inspector P. C. Thompson, and if they find negligence of duty to discharge him.—Carried

NEGRO ASSAILANT OF WOMAN HANGED

Washington, June 12.—Nathaniel Green, a negro who criminally assaulted a white woman within sight of the capitol on Christmas night, went to his death on the scaffold to-day, for the first man to pay the death penalty for such a crime in the District of Columbia. He had confessed and President Wilson had refused clemency.

Almost in a state of collapse, Green was assisted to the execution and was dead in ten minutes.

"Rum and dope did this," he murmured to his guards at the last moment "I hope I'll be an example to the other men of my race."

Green's victim, a government clerk, will be an invalid for life.

IE BOY FOLLOWS THESE RULES HE'LL KEEP WELL;

Baths and Exercise a-Plenty Are Suggested to Members of Public Schools League.

New York, June 12.—Dr. C. Ward Crampton today issued the following training rules to the boys of the Public Schools Athletic League:

Go to bed at 9 o'clock after a thorough wash and a cold splash over chest and trunk; teeth and gums well scrubbed.

Bedroom windows open top and bottom.

Rise not a minute later than 7 o'clock. Go through two-minute drill and hygienic exercises for demonstration. Clean face and neck and scrub hands. Finish up with a big cold splash and hard rub all over. See that feet and legs are clean, and rub them hard and get them into condition.

Breakfast and all meals:

No coffee. No tea. Drink milk, a little at a time.

Chew all food to a pulp. Ask your teacher what foods to avoid.

No smoking! Cut out all habits you know are bad.

Exercise in the fresh air, equivalent to a slow mile run a day. Walk ten miles a week. If you lose weight you lose vitality.

Before school look yourself over. "Am I clean from head to toe? Are all my clothes clean and in order down to the skin? Do I stand up like an athlete?"

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Moderate winds; fine and warm.

PUT AWAY PICKLES.

Mathematician Figures Out the Food Question.

If anyone requires a clear head it is a teacher of mathematics. He must reason in the abstract as it were, and full concentration of mind is necessary if correct results are to be forthcoming.

A man writes:

"I am a teacher of mathematics and for 15 years prior to four years ago, I either took a lunch composed of cold sandwiches, pickles, etc., to school or hurried home and quickly ate a hot dinner.

"The result was that I went to my afternoon work feeling heavy, dull of brain and generally out of sorts. Finally I learned about Grape-Nuts food and began to use it for my noon-day lunch.

"From the first I experienced a great change for the better. The heavy, unpleasant feeling and sour stomach caused by the former diet disappeared. The drowsy languor and disinclination to work soon gave way to a brightness and vim in my afternoon work, a feeling entirely new to me.

"My brain responds promptly to the requirements put upon it, and what is of more importance, the results have been lasting and more satisfactory, the longer I have used Grape-Nuts as a food.

"My wife had been suffering from weak stomach accompanied by sick headaches nearly all her life. She is invariably relieved of these when she sticks to Grape-Nuts, either eaten dry or with milk. Her stomach has gradually grown stronger and her headaches less frequent since she began to eat Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. PINE TAR CORDIAL

Advertisements under above heads, 20 words and under, one insertion, 15c.; 3 insertions, 25c.; 6 insertions, 40c.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 25c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 25c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 25c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 388 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

WEEDS

Weeds, weeds, weeds to no end! This weed question is serious, and getting more so. A short rotation of crops helps greatly in the battle, but even where this is adopted, one has his hands full for a time in dealing with a dirty farm. Thistles fight with the spring grain. Switch grass, blue grass, bindweed, perennial sow thistle and the like make extra work, even in the hoe crops. Docks rear their unsightly heads aloft in the meadows, yellow mustard hides the grain in thousands of fields, and even dandelions do serious mischief, overrunning pastures. These, with hundreds of others, claim urgent attention during the growing season, when the corn and roots [illegible] present [illegible] ought to [illegible] labor. What can be [illegible] We hardly know. [illegible] the majority [illegible] a man by [illegible] Mainly, it must [illegible] larly employed [illegible] ly engagement.

Electric sleep, which may be turned on and off at will, is the alluring prospect offered to people suffering from insomnia, by a German physician who asserts that he has devised a new form of electric current which when applied to the base of the brain will produce a narcotic effect, able to be maintained as long as is desired.

PARCEL POST

The Canadian Manufacturers Association is Pushing on the Reform

The Canadian Manufacturers Association through their transportation department are in the forefront of the battle for a parcel post system in Canada. Industrial Canada, the official organ of the Association, makes the following comment in its last issue:

"Since January 1st, 1913, Canada is the only civilised country in the world without parcels post. On the above date, a system was put in operation by the United States. Many confuse our merchandise rate, by which we can post packages under five pounds weight at the rate of sixteen cents per pound, with parcels post. The real thing is much better than the merchandise rate.

The following comparison of postage rates on a parcel weighing eleven pounds show us how we stand:

From	Postage
London, Eng., to Toronto, Ont.	$ .73
Paris, France, to Toronto, Ont.	.87
Berlin, Germany, to Toronto, Ont.	.90
Hamilton, Ont., to Toronto, Ont.	1.76

This is not all. In order to send eleven pounds by post from Hamilton to Toronto it would be necessary to break the package up into three small packages, each weighing less than five pounds.

In the words of one of Canada's leading lawyers, this country is "the last lone sparrow on the chimney top."—Industrial Canada.

BRIGHT FUTURE FOR FRUIT

British Columbia is Developing on Fruit Growing Lines

Of all the branches of agriculture, that which seems to have the greatest future in British Columbia is fruit-growing. The climate and soil of the Province are peculiarly favorable to tree growth. This was well known to pioneers of the coast, and as far back as Hudson's Bay Company days the best of apples were grown on both Vancouver Island and the mainland. But difficulties were great and trying in these early days and even in more recent years, extending even well into the nineties. Shipping facilities were poor, roads non-existent, and markets none the best, while the cost of clearing and reclaiming the land was, in many instances, prohibitive. It is scarcely to be wondered at that so many of the pioneers simply waited. Waiting was worth while, from a financial, if not from an agricultural, point of view, for real estate values have advanced enormously with the increase in population. Subdivision of the old ranches has followed and the day of small things has vanished. The total plantings in 1911 were 35,000 acres. The increase in 1912 will be fifty per cent.

CRIPPLE'S NOBLE WORK

Miss Sophie Wright Persevered in Spite of Physical Handicap

Miss Sophie Wright, who died in New Orleans, was only 26 years old, and had been a cripple since babyhood, but she was able to leave in New Orleans a monument that will not soon be forgotten. Her back was broken by a fall when she was three years old, and the next six years she spent strapped to a chair. She had so far recovered at the end of this time that she was able to go to school, and at the age of 14 the idea of starting a school of her own occurred to her, for she knew from experience that there was widespread ignorance among girls and boys in New Orleans. Miss Wright found a banker who was willing to lend her $10,000 at 8 per cent., and with this capital she rented a building and with a staff of capable assistants started a night school. An outbreak of yellow fever soon made it necessary for her to close the school, but she converted it into a storehouse for medical supplies, and she and her assistants joined in the work of stamping out the fever. When the epidemic was over, the Wright School was threatened with bankruptcy, but a friendly banker came to her assistance, extinguished the original loan, and reduced the interest on the mortgage. So the work was resumed, and Miss Wright's school has attracted thousands of pupils since then. The gentle cripple seemed to exert a spell over the roughest of her scholars, and many of them were transformed from rowdies into gentlemen, and started fairly on the road to success by her interest in them.

Potato Cakes

Boil and mash one pound and a half of potatoes with one ounce of butter, then beat up an egg with the mashed potatoes. Form into flat round cakes, about one inch thick, dip each cake into flour and fry in boiling fat until a golden brown, place on paper to drain, and serve with sprigs of parsley.

Potato Fritters

Rub three mealy potatoes through a sieve; add two tablespoonfuls of milk, one well-beaten egg, a tablespoonful of flour, a teaspoonful of ground cinnamon, and a pinch of salt. Form into shapes, fry in deep fat, and serve with powdered cinnamon and sugar mixed.

The newest white satin blouses have vest effects of Dresden ribbon in soft pastel shades set in for a relieving bit of color. These are trimmed with plain crystal buttons and are very stunning looking.

The Old Way and the New

In a recent article showing how home manufacturers have become public utilities and how women are responsible for these just as they formerly were responsible for their own cooking and sweeping and their own domestic servants, Martha Bensley Bruyere makes the following amusing but effective comparison:

When I was in college we had a song in which the hero asked his beloved:

"Can you brew, can you bake
Good bread and cake?
Before my love I utter.
Can you sew a seam?
Can you churn the cream?
And bring in the golden butter?
What use is refraction?
Chemical reaction, biologic protoplasm,
Psychologic microcosm?
Would you be my weal,
You must cook the meal—
You shake your head—
You I'll not wed—
An so farewell!"

If that song were re-written and brought up-to-date, the lover's questions would be much harder to answer, and yet they might not be so disconcerting. They would run something like this:

"Are you up on the pure food laws affecting the manufacture of canned soup?
Can you assure me that you know the conditions governing the sanitary production of pastry?
Can you bring enough influence to bear on public opinion so that the family clothing will not have to be made in a sweatshop?
Do you know how to get honest government inspectors appointed, to assure the purity of the milk and butter you promise to serve me?
What use is your knowing
Everything of sewing,
All of pickling and preserving,
All of washing and of serving?
Would you be my weal,
Do not cook the meal—
You shake your head—
You I'll not wed—
And so, Farewell!"

MIGHT HAVE BEEN AVOIDED

And now it is proposed that Hon. Sydney Fisher should be the Liberal candidate in the riding of Chateauguay. This is the chance that the ex-Minister of Agriculture and ex-Member for Brome has been looking for. NERVOUS DYSPEPSIA, GAS OR INDIGESTION

Each "Pape's Diapepsin" Digests 3000 Grains, Ending All Stomach Misery in Five Minutes.

Time it! Pape's Diapepsin will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour, gassy or out-of-order stomach surely within five minutes.

If your meals don't fit comfortably, or what you eat lies like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of indigestion.

Get from your pharmacist a fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take a dose just as soon as you can. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, nausea, debilitating headaches, dizziness or intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for out-of-door stomachs, because it takes hold of your food, and digests it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Relief in five minutes from all stomach misery is waiting for you at any drug store.

These large fifty-cent cases contain enough "Pape's Diapepsin" to keep the entire family free from stomach disorders and indigestion for many months. It belongs in your home.

SYSTEM BEING EXTENDED

Since Hon. Martin Burrell became Minister of Agriculture, there has been a great extension of the Experimental Farms throughout Canada, with a view to increasing their efficiency and of making them of more practical value to the farmers. Until recently certain provinces were served only by farms in adjoining provinces while conditions of soil and climate in certain districts differed so widely as to require special facilities for the study of agricultural problems. By farms or stations every province has now been reached, and in addition sub-stations have been established to serve outlying district and sections within provinces possessing unusual conditions.

Recently no less than eleven new farms or stations have been added to the five original farms. These are situated at Charlottetown in Prince Edward Island: Kentville, in Nova Scotia; Fredericton in New Brunswick; Cap Rouge and Ste Anne de la Pocatiere in Quebec; Rosthern and Scott in Saskatchewan; Lethbridge and Lacombe in Alberta, and Invermere and Sydney in British Columbia. To these must be added sub-stations situated at Kamloops in British Columbia, Fort Vermillion on the Peace River and Forts Smith, Resolution and Providence, and Athabasca Landing beyond the 60th parallel of latitude where some experimental work is being carried on.

OUR LOCAL TAXES.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I was pleased to see the independent stand The Times is taking with regard to the heavy taxes levied in this city. I quite agree with you that Peterborough is, as you say, "mortgaging her financial status to help unborn generations." We are piling up debt to get a few factories. If this goes on, who will buy our debentures? Who are the people so anxious to exploit Peterborough's capital to buy factories? Are they not men who own vacant lots and are making a tool out of the city to help peddle those lots?

FERTILE TERRITORY ALONG HUDSON'S BAY

Settlers to Clear and Drain It are Needed—Much National Wealth in Patricia District

J. B. Tyrrell who explored the district of Patricia on the Hudson Bay slope says in that portion of Ontario there are tens of thousands of acres of fine light clay. It only needs the entry of settlers to drain and clear it to make a fine agricultural country. There is a great deal of swamp, but though the country appears to be flat there is really a very good slope, and it could easily be drained and made most habitable. That it is fertile is shown by the fact that at most of the Hudson Bay posts they grow all their garden vegetables with ease though, of course, there has not been as yet any real attempt at agriculture. Mr. Tyrrell went on to say that the climate, so far as he could ascertain would in no way be a drawback to the district as an agricultural country. The winters are not so severe as those of Northern Saskatchewan and the summers were also temperate and very pleasant. On coming close to the bay, however, the cold wind influence the growth, though the land is good, and he believed that the agricultural value of this section would depend on its production of grass and fodder. This section has for years been the feeding grounds for vast herds of deer, elk, caribou, and all kinds of game, making it a regular sportsman's paradise, and the large numbers of them warrant them proof against extinction. From a mining standpoint, there are large areas underlain with greenstones and other Keewatin rocks, and though there was not time for the party to investigate these, it is known that nearly every where these Keewatin rocks have been found they have proved to be [illegible]. Most of the country supports a short growth of spruce and tamarack, but the mercantile timber is almost wholly confined to the banks of the stream where natural drainage has been afforded to the swampy country.

BRITISH SONG BIRDS MAY BECOME PESTS

Two Harmful Varieties, the Skylark and Tit, Being Brought to Canada

"Leave nature alone or there may be trouble." This is the opinion of a writer, commenting on the introduction into British Columbia of British song birds.

It was with the best intentions that the sparrow was introduced into Canada, in the hope that it would assist in keeping down the insect pests so harmful to agriculture, but as soon as the bird found that a diet of grain was better worth having, it abandoned its former habits and quickly proved once again the truth of the old adage that the cure is often worse than the disease.

Among the birds being sent out from England are the skylark and the tit, both very attractive and desirable birds from many points of view, but not altogether blameless in their habits. The lark is an inveterate destroyer of the clover "leys" in winter. In an agricultural section of British Columbia it is conceivable that the experience of the British farmer would be repeated and if the birds increased there as they probably would at a greater rate than in Britain, their introduction might prove to be nothing short of disastrous.

Far more serious might be the establishment of the tit family in a district where fruit is grown. The tit is an inveterate destroyer of fruit buds, and is not even satisfied to stop at that. In England the great and blue tits make sad havoc in the orchards when the pears and apples begin to ripen, it being their tiresome habit to peck small holes near the stalk of the fruit, so that decay immediately sets in and the fruit is useless for marketing. The amount of damage that a single family of tits can cause—and they invariably forage in companies—is extraordinary, for the birds are not content to finish the fruit they have begun, but spend their whole time in "sampling," so that in a very short time half an orchard may be ruined.

IF GULF STREAM WERE DIVERTED

Would Work a Tremendous Change in Northern and Equatorial Climates

Mr. Carroll Livingstone Riker, the engineer of the Panama Canal, has published a book on the "Power and Control of the Gulf Stream," in which he discusses the problem of preserving to the universe the benevolent warmth of the Gulf Stream and the destruction of the cold of the Arctic. He concludes that a jetty of rocks, loosely thrown together, about 200 miles long across the shoals extending eastward from Newfoundland, near Cape Race, would stop the Labrador Current, whose cold, it has been estimated, is capable of making 2,000,000 tons of ice every second, from running right into the Gulf Stream, whose heat, it has been calculated, is equal to the burning of 2,000,000 tons of coal a minute. They meet now on the Grand Banks, where the water is only about 250 feet deep. The Gulf Stream is split up and spreads out over millions of square leagues of the Atlantic. But, if such a jetty were built, the Labrador Current coming down from the Arctic would be turned eastward, and would be sunk so far when the Gulf Stream met it that the latter warm blue river of the ocean would pass over the great cold river from the North Pole. The warm Gulf Stream would continue in almost undiminished volume to the northward, and the Labrador Current would run a mile deep through the great depths of the Atlantic, making the torrid zone about the equator cooler, while the Gulf Stream would require only three months to melt every inch of ice around the pole. No more icebergs in the steamship lanes, no more fogs about the meeting of the cold and warm currents, storms reduced to a minimum, and the whole of eastern North America a garden of paradise with no great cold or heat, are some of the results Mr. Riker foresees from building the jetty. Cape Hatteras, he believes, would disappear through the increased speed of the Gulf Stream, which he estimates would flow closer to the Jersey coast and incidentally re-deposit along the coast about 6,000,000 acres of land. The melting of the Arctic ice cap, he estimates, would shift the equalising balance of the globe, and the then preponderating weight of the Antarctic ice cap would make what is now the North Pole point shift toward Northern Europe, with the result of producing a nightless summer in the area of Scotland without a dayless winter. Mr. Riker shows that the material for the jetty is ready at hand, that the Labrador Current will itself build up with its sand scoured from its Arctic course, the barrier, to its conflict with the Gulf Stream. Thus, as "Science Siftings" puts it, it would "cost less than $200,000,000 to make Siberia a summer resort, start ice famines in Labrador, give Scotland an all-year summer, with a temperature like Japan's; change the climate of the frigid Atlantic coast of America to one like that of Southern California, melt all the ice on and around the North-Pole, and open it to market gardening. To do so will be much cheaper, much easier, and twice as quickly done as to build the Panama Canal."

FROZEN YET ALIVE

Remarkable Experiments That Have Been Made With Fish

Fishes belong to the class of animals that have variable body temperature, depending on the temperature of their environment. In extreme cold they assume a rigid condition, in which all of the vital functions are suspended, while life still remains present. During several months of each year some of the great rivers of Siberia are frozen solid to the bottom, but many of the fishes imprisoned in the ice retain their vitality, and resume their active life when the ice melts in the spring. This fact has suggested experiments in the freezing of live fish for transportation. Many years ago the celebrated physicist Pictet, of Geneva, put fresh water fishes into a tub of water, which he kept liquid at the freezing point for 24 hours and then allowed to freeze slowly into a solid block of ice, which afterward was cooled gradually. When the ice was melted, a month or even two months afterward, the fishes began to swim as briskly as they did before freezing, and showed no symptom of ill health. Similar experiments have recently been made in France. The fishes are placed in water which is kept near the freezing point for a few hours, then at the freezing point for 15 to 18 hours, and finally frozen by immersing the vessel in a freezing mixture, producing a cake of ice a few inches thick, in which the frozen fishes are embedded. This cake is wrapped in cloth and surrounded with a heat-insulating packing, to prevent melting during transportation. It is necessary to thaw the ice very slowly and to keep the water near the freezing point for several hours, in order to preserve the life of the fishes. Even those which do not survive are in a perfect state of preservation.

THE ORGAN AND THE FIDDLE.

Of course, I don't p'tend to say there's any sort o' choice
In fiddles or in organs, but the thing I was a saying'—
The thing I was a-aimin' when I raised my plaintive voice—
Was dealin' more partickler with the differences in playin';
For instance, if there's any time that I have ever found
When Heaven seems more handy-like an' Life is less a riddle,
It's early in the evenin' when the fambly gethers 'round.
And Emmy plays the organ an' the hired man the fiddle.

It ain't the blamed mazurkers an' cadenzers, such as like
The high-falutin' fiddlers play an' fairly bust their britchin'—
It's more the simple music of a brand that 'pears t' strike
A common sort o' feller where his music "taste" is itchin'—
A sort of jigtime music, such as lodges in your toe
Until that pedal member fairly twists around the others
In playful sort o' manner, an' I swan, you's like to show
A leetle fancy dancin' if they'd let you have your ruthers.

It's good old-fashioned music, such as "Turkey In the Straw"
An' "Waitin' for the Wagon," an' "The Hummin' Bee," an' "Whoa!"
An' "My Sailor 's On the Ocean," an' "Old Sour Mash," an' lots
A lot of others outlawed much as fifty years ago!—
Or I suppose they're outlaws, an' away upon the shelf,
But laway, hearin' of 'em seems to put me back in clover—
It takes me back to somewhere when I used to dance myself.
Before I got lumbago an' my dancin' days was over.

An' ma allows that Emmy's wastin' too much time by far,
In playin' on the organ when she'd ought t' be a-settin'
Her cap for sittin' married, an' the consequences are
She's nigh olh maid and' mother keeps a-stewin' and a-frettin';
But back of all their music an' their combynation song.
It 'pears to me that I can see an' answer to the riddle—
She is old maid, I reckon, but I 'low it ain't for long,
'F she keeps on playin' organ for the hired man to fiddle!

Waste in Pencil Stubs

That more than thirteen million feet of lumber is thrown into waste-paper baskets every year is the statement made by a New York statistician with a head for figures. This enormous waste results, he said, from discarding partly used lead pencils.

"Seventy-three million feet of lumber is used in the manufacture of pencils every year in the United States," he declared. "At least half of each pencil is thrown away because it has poor lead or is too short. Think how the conservation of our forests would be promoted if every person would be more careful in the use of pencils."

MOTOR BOATS

Philadelphia, June 12.—The three little motor boats which started from this city Tuesday afternoon on the 734-mile ocean race to Bermuda for the James Gordon Bennett cup and $1,000 in cash, passed out to sea early this morning during a heavy rain storm. The scratch boat, the Barbara II., was the first boat out, passing the Overfalls lightship at 10.55 o'clock last night, according to a wireless despatch received at the Yachtsmen Club today from the revenue cutter Onondaga, which accompanied the racers down the racer. The Tocsam II. and the Dream are believed to have passed the same point between midnight and 12.30 a.m., but owing to weather conditions the customary signals were not seen by either the crew of the Onondaga or those on the lightship.

E. C. Hadley of Mt. Vernon, N.Y., owner of the Talequah, notified the race officials today that he expects his boat to reach here in time to start at noon tomorrow. The Talequah was launched only a few days ago and it was impossible to get her here in time to start with the other entries on Saturday.

BASEBALL.

St. Louis, June 12.—The funeral of Chris Von der Ahe, owner of the "four-time winners," the St. Louis Browns of the old American Association, took place this afternoon, attended by a notable group of his former associates. The body of the former baseball magnate was interred beside the tombstone he purchased in his prosperous days of 15 years ago. The pallbearers were Ban Johnson, president of the American league; Charles A. Comiskey, C. P. Spink, James David, Ted Sullivan and William Gleason, Jack Gleason and George G. McGinnis.

WHAT McGRAW SAYS.

The American league race has developed into a beautiful battle. In the early days of spring it looked as if it would be a walkaway for the Athletics, but, out of the stable of dark horses, Cleveland has advanced and is giving the Philadelphia team a great old nip-and-tuck fight. The Naps were not reckoned in the pennant running by any of the experts before the season; they lost many of their exhibition games. The showing made by this club is largely due to the fine managerial ability of Birmingham, in my opinion.

Before the end of July the race threatens to become even tighter than it is now. Five powerful teams have a chance to take the honors. Three of these have only outside opportunities. the chance of the Washington club, rated to be a strong contender before the season, becoming more outside every day. It would not surprise me to see either Chicago or being the other two of the three Boston come through eventually, they being the other two of the three teams with the outside chances.

Probably the race will settle down into a battle between Cleveland and the Athletics. [illegible] these two clubs stack up very evenly, with the Philadelphia boys having the edge on experience and general team play. Cleveland looks better in the pitcher's box. Both clubs are determined fighters, the fighting spirit having been put in the Naps by Birmingham.

POLO.

If racing is the sport of kings, polo is the sport of millionaires. Any king, even though he may be an insignificant Indian potentate or a ruler of a Balkan State, with a pocketbook of slim proportions may own a racing stable, but only a man of great wealth can afford to maintain a big string of polo ponies. For race horses if they are fast can earn their keep and make a profit for their owner. But a polo pony is nothing but an expense from the day he is bought until the day of his death. The only thing he can earn is a modicum of glory and a few cups which as a rule do not cost as much as his saddle and bridle. From this it may be gleaned that between racing and polo there is a distinction with a difference. Harry Payne Whitney will spend $20,000 on the international polo series of games to be played at Meadow Brook, L.I., on June 10 and June 14. The Duke of Westminster's expenses for the polo challengers will amount to $60,000. All this for the sake of a silver trophy worth $4,000.

London, June 12.—Viewed by the special correspondents of the London papers, who cabled long reports of the British team's defeat at polo by the Americans yesterday, the challengers' work received considerable criticism.

The Times says: "It is evident that the British forwards failed to take advantage of their opportunities. Even with this failure, however, they would probably have held their own if they had been able to withstand the onslaught of the American forwards in the first period."

WEAK AT BOTH ENDS

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent says: "The English team lacked direction. They were far from showing the brilliant game they put in at practice before the match. It was not only the offence that was weak, but the defence as well, and the majority of the American goals were the result of errors, combined with the more aggressive tactics of the Meadowbrook team. When the English carried the ball up to the American goal, poor stick work invariably spoiled good dribbling."

WANTS BRAIN TRUST IN SCIENTIFIC WORLD

German Scientist Would Apply Modern Business Methods to Conserve Energy of the Savants

Herr Professor Wilhelm Ostwald, the famous chemist of Leipsig, wants to do in the realm of science what has been done in industry, and he is asking his fellow scientists to help regulate and standardise their output.

Professor Ostwald thinks science has been unearthing more useful facts than the average man's brain can comfortably store. Discovery has piled upon discovery in such rapid succession that he believes the people are suffering from mental indigestion brought on by a too liberal diet of knowledge.

"At the present day a great deal is being done by science," writes the professor. "Indeed, at times, it almost appears as if too much were being done, for it has become practically impossible for an individual scientist to follow the total deduction of science in his own field.

"It will easily be seen that modern method is attended with great waste of energy. In chemistry every paper published is abstracted independently at least ten times, the result of lack of organization. What I have said from personal knowledge in chemical science is seen in other sciences.

PROFESSOR OSTWALD

"Now it happens at the present time, in the field of finance, a process is going on which may be regarded as a model for the organization of science and intellectual work.

"The recognition of the fact that competitive struggle is the most energy-destroying and impractical of all methods is gaining stronger foothold. In place of bitter competitive strife among related industries and commercial undertakings, we see everywhere going on the process of combination for joint collaboration and rational distribution.

"The process which we thus see going on in the world of economics must necessarily, therefore, unfold itself in the field of intellectual labor.

"The need has become urgent that the total work be so organised and brought into harmonious union that no energy is wasted."

Which is about all the need for a "BRAIN TRUST" Professor Ostwald thinks is necessary to show. He believes the organization should so fix it that the scientists throughout the world will be placed in a position to know what other men are doing over the same route. He admits, however, that the highest creative productions will still have to be left to what he calls the "individual highly gifted heads."

A step has been made in the direction of the new trust through the establishment in Munich, Bavaria, of an institution called Die Brucke (The Bridge), which plans to follow the work of science everywhere in the world and publish books and pamphlets setting forth what is going on.

When Using a Ladder

It is often desirable to have a ladder propped away from the wall or surface on which work is being done. This is very difficult to do with a ladder alone, but it is not so hard if a pair of props are made as shown in the sketch and attached to the rungs of the ladder in the proper place.

These props may be made long enough to hold the ladder up from the ground and there may be a second pair made which can be used to force the ladder out from the wall surface. Any blacksmith can make them.

HANDY ELECTRIC STOVE

New Invention Also Has Fireless Cooker Attachment

A combination electric stove and fireless cooker has been patented by a Western man. It is said to use electric heat only and to give off practically no heat in a room. The stove is in upright form and the cooker has an opening into the oven instead of at the top. The oven is made of heavy sheet copper with joints double seamed and soldered outside and the heat from the current is applied directly to the radiator in the oven. It is claimed that in 15 to 20 minutes enough heat can be accumulated in this radiator to cook for half a day. In a small home, a stove of this type would be ideal, both because of being fireless and because it does not give off so much heat that a small kitchen is made almost suffocating.

YET THEY WANT TO VOTE

They stood outside the busy shop,
And gazed at things displayed:
At hats and gowns and lingerie,
For widow, wife and maid.
"A pretty thing," he said at last,
And pointed at a hat.
"A pretty thing!" she quick returned,
"Why no one's wearing that!"

He remained discreetly silent,
Till he saw a tailored suit.
"There!" he cried, "is a corker;
That's what I call a beaut!"
She turned on him a glance of scorn,
A glance that crushed him flat;
And the verdict that she uttered was:
"They all are wearing that!"

HEADACHE MEDICINES

Serious Consequences Almost Sure to Follow Constant Taking

The headache medicine habit is a bad one! The powders, tablets and capsules so frequently taken to cure a severe headache often lead to the drug habit. The main argument against using headache medicines is that they harm the blood cells in such a way that they cannot properly carry oxygen to the cells of the body nor can they carry away body wastes. The consequence is self-evident. The body becomes clogged with poison. The individual gets flabby and soft—suboxidized, physically and mentally. The headache which was an occasional visitor becomes a frequent visitor. In stead of being cured by a small dose of headache medicine, it takes a much larger one to dull the pain. However a person may be justified in taking an occasional dose of headache medicine, but in such case the condition should be exceptional. Whenever you find yourself becoming a regular patron of the headache pellet pull yourself up. It's time to take time to find out the cause of the headaches. Remedies that are needed frequently are of little use. It is far better to ascertain the underlying trouble and prevent the need of a cure.

PRIEST DWELLS AMONG ESKIMOS

Father Turquetil Knows the Children of Canada's Far North Better Than Any Other White Man

Rev. Father A. Turquetil, an Oblate missionary famous in the Canadian North for his work among the Eskimos told at Ottawa of his efforts to establish the first Eskimo mission at Chesterfield Inlet, near Baffin Land in the far north of Hudson bay. Fuel, coal, wood and a host of other necessaries must be procured before Father Turquetil may realize his long desired wish.

Father Turquetil spoke of his work in the twelve years he has spent in the remotest mission of the Montagnese Indians at Caribou Lake. From there he frequently journeyed north over the frozen prairies to reach the Eskimos among whom he lived long enough thoroughly to assimilate their customs and become familiar with their modes of speech and thought. As well as any white man in Canada to-day, perhaps he understands the Eskimo character, so different in many ways from that of the Indian.

Father Turquetil's name, it will be remembered, became prominent a year or two ago, when he told of meeting a party of Eskimos who had seen a "big white house" which had come down from the sky with white men in it. This was supposed to have been the balloon in which Andre, the unfortunate explorer, disappeared years ago, never to be heard of again, and subsequently much interest was taken in the story.

EGGSHELL A TONIC

"Eat eggshells, eat eggshells. Throw away the yolk if need be, and spill out the white if you will, but eat the shell. Then you will be healthy and live to see your grandchildren's children."

This is the suggestion of Professors Emmerick and Lowe, who believe that they have found one of the aids to longevity.

They contend that in the eggshell there are chemical constituents which are needed by the body in greater quantities than can be received in any other food.

They declare these constituents increase the vitality of the body, add to its weight, nourish the brain, strengthen the heart and prevent inflammation.

It seems that the professors have made a concoction of egg shell which they call "chloris of eggshell." They maintain this substance energizes the whole system.

It is reasonable to suppose that the lime in the eggshell will be beneficial to the human being who lacks in bone nutrition.

DEMOCRACY IN QUEBEC

A Proposal to Abolish Government Houses Was Voted Down

The Opposition in Quebec endeavored to have the official residence of the Lieutenant-Governor abolished but were voted down. The amendment proposed by Mr. Bernard Shefford, was to the effect that the House requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures for the abolition of Spencerwood as the residence of the Lieutenant-Governor of the province, so as to utilize the property for humanitarian or educational purposes and to give to the Lieutenant-Governor a fixed salary permitting him to lodge where he liked, so as to make the post of Lieutenant-Governor more conformable to democratic ideas, and thus save considerable expenses to the province. Mr. Cousineau, speaking to the amendment, said that while he had respect for the person of the Lieutenant-Governor, he was of the opinion that Quebec should spend much less money for the official residence of the official head of the province. Ontario, he affirmed, spent but $5,000, while Quebec spent about $14,000.

Miracle at Kamloops

Horrified at the sight of an almost headless corpse, the remains of a man who was run over and killed by a train, A. Jasinki, a deaf mute, of Kamloops, B.C., suddenly regained his speech and hearing. The miracle was worked it is supposed by shock, at being confronted suddenly with such a ghastly sight.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

"But if he says no?"

"I am going anyway."

"Oh, Wilfred, I am so glad. Why, it makes another thing of it," cried the girl. "When I said that about staying in Richmond, I didn't know— Oh, I do want to help all I can."

"You do? Well, then, for heaven's sake, be quick about it and cut off those trousers. So long as I get them in the morning," said Wilfred, "I guess it will be in plenty of time."

"When did you say your mother was going to write?"

"Tonight."

"Of course, she doesn't want you to go, and she'll tell your father not to let you. Yes," she continued eagerly, as Wilfred looked up, horror-stricken at the idea; "that's the way mothers always do."

"What can I do, then?" he asked her.

"Why don't you write to him yourself, and then you can tell him just what you like."

"That's a fine idea. I'll tell him that I can't stay here, and that I'm going to enlist whether he says so or not. That'll make him say yes, won't it?"

"Why, of course; there'll be nothing else for him to say."

"Say, you are a pretty good girl," said Wilfred, catching her hand impulsively. "I'll go upstairs and write it now. You finish these as soon as you can. You can ask those women for some scissors, and when they are ready leave them in this closet, but don't let anyone see you doing it, whatever happens."

"No, I won't," said Caroline, as Wilfred hurried off.

She went over to the room where the women were sewing, and borrowed a pair of scissors; then she came back and started to cut off the trousers where they were marked. The cloth was old and worn, but it was, nevertheless, stiff and hard, and her scissors were dull. Men spent their time in sharpening other things than woman's tools during those days in Richmond, and her slender fingers made hard work of the amputations. Beside, she was prone to stop and think and dream of her soldier boy while engaged in this congenial work. She had not finished the alteration, therefore, when she heard a step in the hall. She caught up the trousers, striving to conceal them, entirely forgetful of the jacket which lay on the table.

"Oh," said Mrs. Varney, as she came into the room; "you haven't gone yet?"

"No," faltered the girl; "we don't assemble for a little while, and—"

"Don't assemble?"

"I mean for the party. It doesn't begin for half an hour yet, and—"

"Oh; then you have plenty of time."

"Yes," said Caroline. "But I will have to go now, sure enough." She turned away and, as she did so, her scissors fell clattering to the floor.

"You dropped your scissors, my dear," said Mrs. Varney.

"I thought I heard something fall," she faltered in growing confusion.

She came back for her scissors, and in her agitation and nervousness, she dropped one of the pieces of trouser leg on the floor.

"What are you making, Caroline?" asked Mrs. Varney, looking curiously at the little huddled-up soiled piece of gray on the carpet, while Caroline made a desperate grab at it.

"Oh, just altering an old—dress, Mrs. Varney. That's all."

Mrs. Varney looked at her through her glasses. As she did so, Caroline's agitated movement caused the other trouser leg, with its half-severed end hanging from it, to dangle over her arm.

"And what is that?" asked Mrs. Varney.

"Oh—that's—er—one of the sleeves," answered Caroline desperately, hurrying out in great confusion.

Mrs. Varney laughed softly to herself. As she did so, her glance fell upon the little heap of gray on the table. She picked it up and opened it. It was a gray jacket, a soldier's jacket. It looked as if it might be about Wilfred's size. There was a bullet hole in the breast, and there was a dull brown stain around the opening. Mrs. Varney kissed the worn coat. She saw it all now.

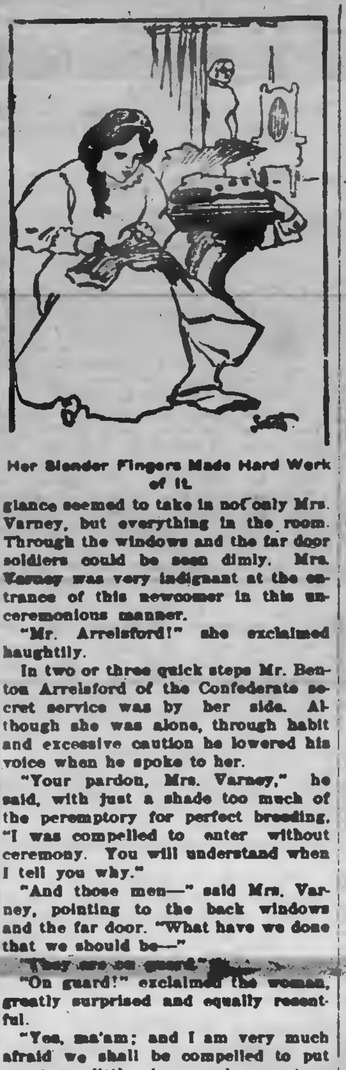
"For Wilfred," she whispered. "He has probably got it from some dead soldier at the hospital, and Caroline's dress that she was altering—"

She clasped the jacket tightly to her breast, looked up, and smiled and prayed through her tears.

CHAPTER V.

The Unfaithful Servant.

But Mrs. Varney was not allowed to indulge in either her bitter retrospect or her dread anticipations very long. Her reverie was interrupted by the subdued trampling of heavy feet upon the floor of the back porch. The long drawing room extended across the house, and had porches at front and back, to which access was had through long French windows. The sound was so sudden and so unexpected that she dropped the jacket on the couch and turned to the window. The sound of low, hushed voices came to her, and the next moment a tall, fine-looking young man of rather distinguished appearance entered the room. He was not in uniform, but wore the customary full-skirted frock coat of the period, and carried his big black hat in his hand. For the rest, he was a very keen, sharp-eyed man, whose movements were quick and stealthy and whose quick, comprehensive glance seemed to take in not only Mrs. Varney, but everything in the room. Through the windows and the far door soldiers could be seen dimly. Mrs. Varney was very indignant at the entrance of this newcomer in this unceremonious manner.



Her Slender Fingers Made Hard Work of It.

"Mr. Arrelsford!" she exclaimed haughtily.

In two or three quick steps Mr. Benton Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service was by her side. Although she was alone, through habit and excessive caution he lowered his voice when he spoke to her.

"Your pardon, Mrs. Varney," he said, with just a shade too much of the peremptory for perfect breeding. "I was compelled to enter without ceremony. You will understand when I tell you why."

"And those men—" said Mrs. Varney, pointing to the back windows and the far door. "What have we done that we should be—"

"They are on guard."

"On guard!" exclaimed the woman, greatly surprised and equally resentful.

"Yes, ma'am; and I am very much afraid we shall be compelled to put you to a little inconvenience; temporary, I assure you, but necessary." He glanced about cautiously and pointed to the door across the hall. "Is there anybody in that room, Mrs. Varney?"

"Yes, a number of ladies sewing for the hospital; they expect to stay all night."

"Very good," said Arrelsford. "Will you kindly come a little farther away? I would not have them overhear by any possibility."

There was no possibility of anyone overhearing their conversation, but if Mr. Arrelsford ever erred it was not through lack of caution. Still more astonished, Mrs. Varney followed him. They stopped by the fireplace.

"One of your servants has got himself into trouble, Mrs. Varney, and we're compelled to have him watched," he began.

"Watched by a squad of soldiers?"

"It is well not to neglect any precaution, ma'am."

"And what kind of trouble, pray?" asked the woman.

"Very serious, I am sorry to say. At least that is the way it looks now. You've got an old white-haired butler here—"

"You mean Jonas?"

"I believe that's his name," said Arrelsford.

"And you suspect him of something?"

Mr. Arrelsford lowered his voice still further and assumed an air of great importance.

"We don't merely suspect him; we know what he has done."

"And what has he done, sir?"

"He has been down to Libby prison under pretense of selling things to the Yankees we've got in there, and he now has on his person a written communication from one of them which he intends to deliver to some Yankee spy or agent, here in Richmond."

Mrs. Varney gasped in astonishment at this tremendous charge, which was made in Arrelsford's most impressive manner.

"I don't believe it," she said at last. "He has been in the family for years; he wouldn't dare."

Arrelsford shook his head.

"I am afraid it is true," he said.

"Very well," said Mrs. Varney decidedly, apparently not at all convinced. "I will send for the man. Let us see—"

She reached out her hand to the bell-rope hanging from the wall, but Mr. Arrelsford caught her arm, evidently to her great repugnance.

"No, no!" he said quickly, "not yet. We have got to get that paper, and if he's alarmed he will destroy it, and we must have it. It will give us the clue to one of their cursed plots. They have been right close on this town for months, trying to break down our defenses and get in on us. This is some rascally game they are at to weaken us from the inside. Two weeks ago we got word from our secret agents that we keep over there in the Yankee lines, telling us that two brothers, Lewis and Henry Dumont—"

"The Dumonts of West Virginia?" interrupted Mrs. Varney, who was now keenly attentive to all that was said.

"The very same."

"Why, their father is a general in the Yankee army."

"Yes; and they are in the federal secret service, and they are the boldest, most desperately determined men in the whole Yankee army. They've already done us more harm than an army corps."

"Yes?"

"They have volunteered to do some desperate piece of work here in Richmond, we have learned. We have close descriptions of both these men, but we have never been able to get our hands on either of them until last night."

"Have you captured them?"

"We've got one of them, and it won't take long to get the other," said Arrelsford, in a fierce, truculent whisper.

"The one you caught, was he here in Richmond?" asked Mrs. Varney, greatly affected by the other's overwhelming emotion.

"No, he was brought in last night with a lot of men we captured in a little sortie."

"Taken prisoner?"

"Yes, but without resistance."

"I don't understand."

"He let himself be taken. That's one of their tricks for getting into our lines when they want to bring a message or give some signal."

"You mean that they deliberately allow themselves to be taken to Libby prison?"

"Yes, damn them!" said Arrelsford harshly. "I beg your pardon, ma'am, but—"

Mrs. Varney waved her hand as if Mr. Arrelsford's oaths, like his presence, were nothing to her.

"We were on the lookout for this man, and we spotted him pretty quickly. I gave orders not to search him, and not to have his clothes taken away from him, but to put him in with the others and keep the closest watch on him that was ever kept on a man. We knew from his coming in that his brother must be here in the city, and he'd send a message to him the first chance he got."

"But Jonas, how could he—"

"Easily enough. He comes down to the prison to sell things to the prisoners with other negroes. We let him pass in, watching him as we watch them all. He fools around a while, until he gets a chance to brush against this man Dumont. My men are keeping that fellow under close observation, and they saw a piece of paper pass between them. By my orders they gave no sign. We want to catch the man to whom he is to deliver the paper. He has the paper on him now."

"I will never believe it."

"It is true, and that is the reason for these men on the back porch that you see. I have put others at every window at the back of the house. He can't get away; he will have to give it up."

"And the man he gives it to will be the man you want?" said Mrs. Varney.

"Yes; but I can't wait long. If that nigger sees my men or hears a sound, he will destroy it before we can jump in on him. I want the man, but I want the paper, too. Excuse me." He stepped to the back window. "Corporal!" he said softly. The long porch window was open on account of the balmy air of the night, and a soldier, tattered and dusty, instantly appeared and saluted. "How are things now?" asked Arrelsford.

"All quiet now, sir."

"Very good," said Arrelsford. "I was afraid he would get away. We've got to get the paper. If we have the paper, perhaps we can get the man. It is the key to the game they are trying to play against us, and without it the man is helpless."

"No, no," urged Mrs. Varney. "The man he is going to give it to, get him."

"Yes, yes, of course," assented Arrelsford; "but that paper might give us a clue. If not, I'll make the nigger tell. Damn him, I'll shoot it out of him. How quickly can you get at him from that door, corporal?"

"In no time at all, sir. It's through a hallway and across the dining room. He is in the pantry."

"Well," said Arrelsford, "take two men, and—"

"Wait," said Mrs. Varney; "I still doubt your story, but I am glad to help. Why don't you keep your men out of sight and let me send for him here, and then—"

Arrelsford thought a moment.

"That may be the better plan," he admitted. "Get him in here and, while you are talking to him, they can seize him from behind. He won't be able to do a thing. Do you hear, corporal?"

"Yes, sir."

"Keep your men out of sight; get them back there in the hall, and while we're making him talk, send a man down each side and pin him. Hold him stiff. He mustn't destroy any paper he's got."

The corporal raised his hand in salute and left the room. The men disappeared from the windows, and the back porch looked as empty as before. The whole discussion and the movements of the men had been practically noiseless.

"Now, Mr. Arrelsford, are you ready?"

"Yes, ma'am."

Mrs. Varney rang the bell on the instant. The two watched each other intently, and in a moment old Martha appeared at the door.

"Did you-all ring, ma'am?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Varney; "I want some one to send to the hospital."

"Luthah is out heah, ma'am."

"Luther? He's too small, I don't want a boy."

"Well, den, Jonas—"

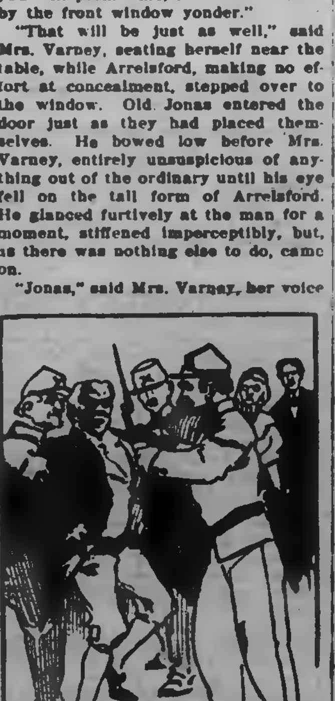
"Yes, Jonas will do; tell him to come in here immediately."

"Yas'm."

"Perhaps you had better sit down, Mrs. Varney," said Arrelsford; "and if you will permit me, I will stand back by the front window yonder."

"That will be just as well," said Mrs. Varney, seating herself near the table, while Arrelsford, making no effort at concealment, stepped over to the window. Old Jonas entered the door just as they had placed themselves. He bowed low before Mrs. Varney, entirely unsuspicious of anything out of the ordinary until his eye fell on the tall form of Arrelsford. He glanced furtively at the man for a moment, stiffened imperceptibly, but, as there was nothing else to do, came on.

"Jonas," said Mrs. Varney, her voice low and level in spite of her agitation.



Drew From an Inside Pocket a Folded Paper.

"Yes'm."

"Have you any idea why I sent for you?"

"Ah heahd you was gwine send me to de hosspile, ma'am."

"Oh, then Martha told you," said Mrs. Varney.

While the little dialogue was taking place, Mr. Arrelsford had made a signal, and the corporal and two men had entered the room silently, and now swiftly advanced to the side of the still unobserving negro.

"She didn't exactly say what you—" he began.

The next instant the two men fell upon him. He might have made some struggle, although it would have been useless. The windows were instantly filled with men, and an order would have called them into the room. He was an old man, and the two soldiers that seized him were young. He was too surprised to fight, and stood as helpless as a lamb about to be slaughtered, his face fairly gray with sudden terror. The corporal flung open the butler's faded livery coat, and for the moment Jonas, menaced now by a search, and knowing what the result would be, struggled furiously, but the men soon mastered him, and the corporal, continuing his search, presently drew from an inside pocket a small folded paper.

"Jonas, Jonas!" said Mrs Varney, in bitter disappointment; "how could you?"

"I told you so," said Mr. Arrelsford truthfully, triumphantly, and most aggravatingly under the circumstances, taking the folded paper. "Corporal," he added, "while I read this, see if he has got anything more."

A further search, however, revealed nothing. Arrelsford had scarcely completed the reading of the brief note when the corporal reported:

"That is all he has, sir."

Arrelsford nodded. The men had released Jonas, but stood by his side, and the secret service agent now approached him.

"Who was this for?" he asked sharply and tersely.

The negro stared at him stolidly and silently, his face ashen with fright.

"Look here," continued the other, "if you don't tell me it is going to make it pretty bad for you."

The words apparently made no further impression upon the servant. Arrelsford tried another tack. He turned to Mrs. Varney, who was completely dismayed at this breach of trust by one who had been attached to the family fortunes for so many years.

"I am right sorry, ma'am," he said very distinctly, "but it looks like we have got to shoot him."

"Oh!" cried Mrs. Varney at that. "Jonas, speak!"

But even to that appeal he remained silent. Arrelsford waited a moment and then:

"Corporal," he said; "take him outside and get it out of him. String him up until he talks. But don't let him yell or give any alarm; gag him until he's ready to tell. You understand?"

The corporal nodded and turned toward the hall door.

"Not that way," said Arrelsford; "take him to the back of the house and keep him quiet, whatever . . . Nobody must know about [illegible], not a soul."

"Very good, sir," said the corporal, saluting. He gave an order to the men, and they marched Jonas off, swiftly and silently. Nothing that had been said or done had disturbed the women across the hall. Mrs. Varney glanced up at the unfolded piece of paper in Mr. Arrelsford's hand. He was smiling triumphantly.

"Was there anything in that?" she asked.

"Yes, there was. We know the trick they meant to play."

"But not the man who was to play it?"

"I didn't say that, ma'am."

"Does it give you a clue to it?"

"It does."

"Will it answer?"

"It will."

"Then you know—"

"As plain as if we had his name."

"Thank God for that," exclaimed the woman. "May I see it?"

Arrelsford hesitated.

"I see no reason why you should not."

He extended his hand toward her, and she glanced at the paper.

"Attack tonight. Plan 3. Use telegraph!" she read. She looked up.

"What does it mean?" she asked tremulously.

"They are to attack tonight, and the place where they are to strike is indicated by Plan 3."

"Plan 3?" questioned the woman.

"Yes; the man this is sent to will know what is meant by that. It has been arranged beforehand, and—"

"But the last words," said Mrs. Varney. "Use telegraph?"

"That is plain, too. He is to use our war department telegraph and send some false order to weaken that portion, the one they indicate by 'Plan 3,' so that when they assault it, they will find it feebly defended or not at all, and break through and come down on the city and swamp us."

"But," exclaimed Mrs. Varney in deepest indignation and excitement, "the man who was to do this? Who is he? There is nothing about him that I can see."

"But I can see something."

"What? Where?"

"In the words, 'Use telegraph.' We know every man on the telegraph service, and every one of them is true. There is some one who will try to get into that service if the game is carried out, and—"

"Then he will be the man," said Mrs Varney.

"Yes; there aren't so many men in Richmond that can do that. It isn't every man that's expert enough—Mrs. Varney, Jonas brought this paper to your house, and—"

"To my house?" exclaimed the woman in great astonishment, and then she stopped, appalled by a sudden thought which came to her.

"At the same time," said Arrelsford, "your daughter has been trying to get an appointment for some one on the telegraph service. Perhaps she could give us some idea, and—"

Mrs. Varney rose and stood as if rooted to the spot.

"You mean—"

"Captain Thorne," said Arrelsford impressively.

EXPERIENCE WITH
Sanol's Remedies

THE SANOL MFG. CO.,
WINNIPEG.
Jan. 23, 1912.

Dear Sirs,—

In regard to the sale of SANOL & SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, might say I have been handling the goods for about three months. I was obliged to put in SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES to supply one of my customers, who is now completely cured, and whom, I believe, has sent a testimonial to your office. Another customer ordered SANOL and I was obliged to stock it. This gentleman was so well satisfied that he has sent bottles to his friends. Up to this time I had never really taken much interest in the preparations but when customer after customer would come in and tell me about what SANOL had done for them, I came to the conclusion it would be worth my while getting behind SANOL and recommending it to my customers. This I have done and I have heard nothing but words of praise for SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, I am.

Yours truly,
F. J. H. HAMLYN.

When Appetite Fails And Digestion Is Bad

THERE IS DANGER AHEAD FOR THE MAN WHO NEGLECTS NATURE'S WARNING.

Dyspepsia Tendencies are Serious and Should be Treated Accordingly.

There is a strong moral in the statement of James Schrum, of Pleasant street, Dartmouth, N.S. Like thousands of people, he was failing in health because his stomach and digestive organs were out of repair. His vitality was slipping away; he was losing ground every day.

"I could not have held on much longer. I was wasting away simply because no remedy I used gave tone and strength to my stomach. The vital forces of my system seemed dead. I was advised to try Dr. Hamilton's Pills. What hidden weakness they searched out I don't know, but in a miraculous way they have made a new man of me. My stomach troubles are cured, rich blood now runs through my veins—clear skin and unmistakable evidences of health and vigor I feel every day. Dr. Hamilton's Pills have certainly mastered the secret of curing the sickly unnervated man and I strongly urge everyone in failing or lost health to use this grand remedy."

Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut are purely vegetable. 25c. per box, five for $1.00, all druggists and storekeepers, or postpaid from the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Ont.

APPRENTICE WANTED.

To feed press and learn press work. A splendid chance to learn one of the very best trades. Apply at Times Office.

SINGLE STORE TO RENT

On George Street, business section. For particulars apply to R. J. Kidd, Real Estate Office, 137 Charlotte Street.

A Fire Quickly Quenched.

The local fire department received a call early yesterday afternoon to a fire at the G.T.R. oil-house. A spark from a locomotive had set fire to the roof, but the prompt arrival of the brigade prevented much damage being done.

DeLaval Officials Here.

Messrs. J. L. Flagg, of New York; R. Stoddard, also of New York, M. Leitch, of Powkespaie and E. Hanson, of Sweden, are in the city today in connection with the DeLaval Company. Mr. Stoddard is president of the Canadian branches of that company.

Ald. Gillespie Won His Case.

The case of Edward Sanderson vs. George A. Gillespie, has been concluded in the County Court. Upon the finding of the Jury, His Honour Judge Huycke entered judgment for the defendant with costs. Mr. D. W. Dumble, K.C., acted for plaintiff and Mr. F. D. Kerr represented the defendant.

Peterborough May Get Meet.

Mr. R. Bethune of Peterborough is attending the annual convention of the Canadian Order of Foresters, which is being held in London, Ont. Nominations for place of next meeting were made, Peterborough being included among the list of places proposed.

County Council Chamber Renovated.

The Council Chamber at the Court House will present a much altered and handsome appearance, when Warden J. H. Garbutt opens the June session of the County Council on Tuesday, June 17th at 2 o'clock. During the past two weeks the chamber has undergone extensive painting and papering.

Fast Bridge Driving.

A farmer named Young was yesterday fined for driving over Hunter St. bridge at a faster rate than walking. His fine and costs amounted to $5.76. Hugh Mackie was similarly charged, $4.40, which was paid. Harry Gregory, 14 years old, was given a similar dose for the same offence.

Returns After 27 Years.

Mr. Harry Martin, of Springfield, Ill., an old Peterborough boy, is the guest of Mr. A. Bartley, 164 Simcoe Street. Mr. Martin left Peterborough twenty-seven years ago, and this is his first return visit. When he left Peterborough, Mr. Martin held a minor position with the C.P.R. He is now one of the best-known conductors on the New York Central R. R.

New Hockey Secretary.

At a meeting of the Executive of the Peterborough Hockey Club, the resignation of Mr. R. M. Glover from the position of secretary-Treasurer of the club, was unwillingly accepted, and a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to Mr. Glover for his services in that capacity. Mr. J. P. Bond, was elected secretary-Treasurer, and Mr. Maurice Park takes Mr. Bond's place as Vice-President of the club

Broke Cow By-Law.

George Fosset of Otonabee, was charged yesterday with letting his cows run at large. He said Otonabee had a law against letting cows run at large, but it was not enforced. His Worship said, the minute your cows step over the city boundary line those cows would get it good and plenty. Fosset pleaded guilty and paid $2. Joshua Curry was similarly charged. His case was enlarged until Saturday.

A Scotsman's Gold Gone.

At yesterday's police court, Con Ryan was once more charged with having been found drunk. Con pleaded guilty and was given a $2 fine to be paid forthwith. James Payne, a recently arrived Scotch immigrant, pleaded guilty to having been found drunk. He was fined $2 to be paid forthwith. James had several golden sovereigns on his person on Tuesday, but as his hilarity ran its course, some one connected with the three "quid." James will spend 10 days in Castle Nesbit passing resolutions to avoid Canadian whiskey in the future.

An Unorthodox Dog.

In the police court yesterday, Samuel Feinburg was called but was not present. The charge was keeping a vicious dog, that evidently does not like Gentile. His case was enlarged until Saturday morning. If the charge, as laid is proven, it will show that Feinburg's dog is not strictly orthodox Jew, as it is said to have bitten two Gentile children recently. Hebrews are not allowed to eat meat that is not "Kosher." However as the alleged biting of the second child occurred day before yesterday, a Jewish Feast day, the dog might think the Kosher embargo lifted

Local Cadets For Outing.

All the Peterborough Cadets will again be given six days' camp at Barriefield this summer, commencing with the third of July. This also only includes the various cadet corps in the city, but Boy Scouts and boys not attached to cadet corps, who are over 12 years old. This last seems to be a point over which there exists some misunderstanding. Any boy over 12 years of age, who desires the outing will be taken and treated just like the cadets. They will be taught semaphore drill, first aid work and rifle shooting, under competent supervision. Expenses for the trip and camp are defrayed by the Militia Department, a few personal effects only, being required of the boys.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW ON THE DIAL OF A CITY LIFE.

Mr. Thos. Rush yesterday issued a writ against Mr. Davis, former manager of the Chemong Hotel for assault and blackmail. The case will be tried on June 17th.

Yesterday a big automobile owned by one of Peterborough's leading citizens went up George street at an excessive speed. This car is carrying last year's license on the front end and none on the back.

Fishing for bass and 'lunge opens next Monday. It is said that several canned, carefully canned, fish stories, having their origin within the present and past weeks, will be sprung as happening on the 16th.

Swat the Peterborough fly. Swat it quick and hard. Every fly you swat now means 117,288 flies less to swat when you are trying to get that snooze in a hot August afternoon.

A newly arrived Scotchman was fined $2 yesterday for not knowing that Canadian whiskey, especially when augmented with knockout drops is more potent than Heather Dew as drank in dear old Glasgie.

Bowmanville has had its first burglary. In the wee sma' hoors, a burglar flung a two pound stone through the plate glass front of Haddy's jewellery store, got in and stole some watches. The Bowmanville police force evidently does not require sleeping mixture.

How to Ascertain If You Have Catarrh

Look for Symptoms of This Treacherous Disease in the Following List.

"Is your breath bad?"
"Is your throat sore?"
"Do you cough at night?"
"Is your voice raspy?"
"Does your nose stop up?"
"Have you nasal discharge?"
"Do you spit up phlegm?"
"Has your nose an itchy feeling?"
"Have you pain across the eyes?"
"Is your throat irritable, weak?"
"Do you sleep with mouth open?"
"Are you subject to sneezing fits?"
"Do your ears roar and buzz?"
"Are you hard of hearing?"

If you have any of these indications of Catarrh, cure the trouble now—stop it before it gets into the lungs or bronchial tubes—then it may be too late. The remedy is "Catarrhozone," a direct breathable cure that places antiseptic balsams and healing medication on every spot that's tainted by germs.

"No one can know better than I the enormous benefit one gets from the very first day's use of Catarrhozone," writes T. T. Hopkins, of Westvale, P.Q. "I had for years a stubborn case of bronchial catarrh, ear noises, headache, sore eyes, stopped-up nose and throat. It affected my appetite and made my breath rank. Catarrhozone cured quickly."

The dollar outfit last two months, and is guaranteed; smaller size, 50c, sample size, 25c, at all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catrrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

The Bank of Montreal will take possession of the present Customs House on September 1st, and the Customs and Inland Revenue, as noted before in The Times, officials will be provided with offices in the Bradburn Block while the new building is being erected.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Moffitt, of Elgin, Man., are visiting friends in the city and Smith township.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Tully, and Miss Ethel have opened their cottage, "Fern Lodge," at Chemong Park for the summer.

Mr. J. J. Garvey, who for the past few weeks has been visiting in the city, left yesterday for Williston, N.D., Mr. Garvey is connected with the Standard Oil Co., out there.

Lindsay Post: Mestrs. W. R. Travers, W. R. Morris, W. H. Dunsford, and A. McIntosh, Peterborough, motored to town today in Mr. Travers' car.

Mr. James E. Herring, Inspector of the North American Life Assurance Co., Toronto, was a guest at the Snowden House yesterday.

Miss Ruth Flynn, who has been connected with the B. F. Ackerman & Son offices for the past two years left yesterhay for Regina, where she has been transferred to their branch office in that city.

Mr. Herb Kendry was in the city yesterday. He stated to The Times that whilst the Indian Congress is doing big business, the weather has been an adverse factor. The Congress goes next week to Atlantic City, N.J.

GIRL OF 15 TELLS STORY OF "SLAVERY"

Worchester Woman Taken on Charge Of Being a Procuress.

Worcester, June 12.—A sensational story of "white slave" life, told to the police yesterday by Hazel Rawson, 15 years old, resulted in the arrest early this morning of Mrs. Geace Holland, 27 years old, by Sergeant Williams.

The arrest came only after an extended search for Mrs. Holland throughout the city by detectives and police officers. She was finally found at 50 Benefit street. Taken to headquarters, she was charged with being a procuress and was released on $500 bail, furnished by a man giving his name as Arthur Flagg, who took Mrs. Holland away in a touring car.

According to the police, Mrs. Holland was only recently released from the Sherborn women's prison, where she served a term for a statutory offence. Since her release the police say she has been procuring young Worcester girls and has been taking them to the White City on the Shrewsbury side of Lake Quinsigamond for the purpose of letting them out to men, most of whom were regular customers of Mrs. Holland.

One of these girls is Hazel Rawson, who was arrested Friday night charged with vagrancy. When questioned by the police, she broke down, and, in tears, told the police a long story of having been induced by Mrs. Holland to frequent White City and make acquaintance with as many men as possible.

Nearly all the money thus collected was kept by Mrs. Holland, it is said.

Police Chief Hill, commenting on the arrest, said: "I have a list of names of many of the men who were Mrs. Holland's customers, and who hired several of the girls employed by her. This list I obtained partly from the Hazel Rawson, and partly through other sources."

Mrs. Holland was arrested here July 26, 1911, on the former charge. In the lower court she was sentenced to six months in the house of correction, but she appealed. In the higher court she was sentenced to Sherborn. A few months ago she was released.

It is said that one of the girls under watch by the police is in a deplorable physical condition.

JAIL MARRIAGE HONEYMOON TOO

Georgia Bridegroom, 60, and Bride, 16, in Jail While Knot is Being Untangled

Jesup, Ga., June 12.—Never, perhaps, in the history of marriage, has there been such a matrimonial mix-up as that of the Joneses and Robertsons and Thomases and Driggers. Old Mr. Jones and young Mrs. Jones are trying to figure it out while they while away their honeymoon in jail on a bigamy charge.

You remember the famous matrimonial puzzle of the Pharisee lawyer in the New Testament.

The eldest of seven brothers married a wife, and then died. The next brother married her, and he died. All the rest married her in succession, and all of them died. Finally the woman died herself. And the lawyer wanted to know "whose wife she would be in the kingdom of heaven."

Well, this puzzle is something like that, only worse. And if you can figure out whose wife pretty Hattie Jones is here on earth and whose husband her first mate is, and whose husband Nathan Jones is, and whose wife Nathan's first wife is, you can beat any lawyer in Wayne county, Georgia.

Nathan and Hattie met for the first time a month ago. He was 60 and she was only 16. It was love at first sight, and in a week they were married at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Jane Robertson.

Then some meddling grand junior remembered that Nathan Jones had been married before to a girl named Driggers, and he couldn't recall any divorce or annulment. Also he seemed to remember that Hattie had been married to a man named Thomas, and there wasn't any record of legal separation. So a deputy sheriff started after the bride and groom with a warrant.

HONEYMOONERS DODGE DEPUTY

Hattie and Natham got wind of it and lit out. They didn't carry any excess baggage. They just slung a few things into a bag, and old Nathan swung it over his shoulder, and of went the honeymooners from their home in Screven, dodging the deputy.

It was very easy to follow their trial, and the deputy caught them and brought them to the Wayne county jail.

"Sure. I've been married before," admitted Nathan from behind the bars. "I've been married twice that I recollect of. My first wife died. I lived alone on my farm several years then married Alice Driggers.

"Next morning Alice told me that Driggers wasn't her maiden name, that she was married to a Driggers person, and he'd certainly make trouble when he found she's up and married me, too. So I sent her away. Wouldn't you? When I met Hattie I just couldn't help marrying her."

BRIDE TELLS HER STORY.

Then Hattie, in the next cell, told her story.

"I love Nathan," she said, "and that's all that counts, isn't it? I didn't love that Thomas man that I married before. And, besides, he told me one day that he had another wife, and he bragged about the wives he'd had before he married her. So I ran away. Then Nathan came along and I married him, and I'm most dreadful happy. Only I wish they'd let us out of jail."

AUSTRIAN ARCHDUKE WRITES MUSHY STUFF:

Vienna, June 12.—Archduke Joseph a nephew of the Emperor, has made his debut as a short story writer. His first "offense" is entitled "Forest Solitude," and is rather mushy stuff. But while given to an overdose of sentiment, the Archduke knows how to write German. His diction is fluent, and there is nothing of the amateur about it, but it is rather artificial and high-class. Joseph, who lives in Budapest, is a doctor of technique, besides holding a number of army appointments. He is married to Princess Augusta, of Bavaria, and the couple have three children, Joseph, Sophia and Ladislaus.

TOLD MINERS TO KEEP GUNS

"Mother" Jones, Aged Leader, Describes Her Work in Virginia.

Pittsburgh, June 12.—"We are going to organize the State of West Virginia if every one of us die in the battle," declared Mrs. Mary "Mother" Jones, the aged leader of the miners of the mountain state, to a large audience at a local theatre today. "I'm going back to West Virginia. If I can't go on a train, I'll walk in."

Mrs. Jones arrived here today from Washington, where she had presented the miner's side of the West Virginia strike situation to Senator Kern.

When martial law was declared in the West Virginia coal fields "Mother" Jones hurried to the scene from Montana, and announced her intention to address the men in the trouble zone.

"One of the boys," she said, "told me: 'If you go up there, Mother, you'll come back on a stretcher; no organizer can speak there.' I spoke there. I didn't come out on a stretcher. I raised Hell."

She explained that after organizing the men she went to work to organize the women. "I organized the women," said the speaker, "because the women can lick a crab better than you fellows here can."

In discussing the question as to whether the miners had weapons, "Mother" Jones admitted that "the miners had some guns; they needed them."

"When I was addressing the boys at a meeting," she added in this connection, I said: 'The governor wants your guns. Don't you dare give up any of them. If you are forced to use them, you use them.'"

In a vigorous attack on the laboring classes of the country, she exclaimed: "You are moral cowards; there was a drum head court martial made up of military despots, and you did not even stir."

The trial of both herself and the miners by the military commission was related. "I shall never forget the last day of the trial. It seemed to me as if the flag of liberty was gone, and in its stead the flag of Russia waved," she said. "When you do go among those people down there and see them as I have, I want to say that the brutality is worse than darkest Russia and barbarous Mexico."

In conclusion "Mother" Jones advised the labor unions of the country to "stand together." "You trade unions must stop wrangling with the I. W. W., and the I. W. W. must stop wrangling with the trades unions. I know industrial unionism is coming and you can't stop it."

NO MINISTERIAL SEATS SAFE WITH THE HEBREW VICTOR

Jewish Oil Merchant is Given Vast Majority in London Borough

London, June 13.—The [illegible] Unionist majority in the London borough bye-election in Wandsworth is all the more remarkable because the Unionist candidate was a Jew, named Samuel Samuel, associated in oil concerns.

If in the present somewhat inflamed state of English feeling on the subject of Jews generally, also Marconis and oil deals, a Jewish oil merchant can get 6,000 majority, hardly any Ministerial seat would seem safe.

Times Chastises Carson.

The Times administers a severe editorial rebuke to Sir Edward Carson and F. E. Smith for accepting briefs for Godfrey Isaacs in the Marconi libel case, thus tying their own hands in the forthcoming Parliamentary discussion of the propriety of the Marconi deals of Godfrey Isaacs' Ministerial associates: Rufus Isaacs, Lloyd George and Lord Murray.

The Times says:

"There are not two Sir Edward Carsons."

The passionately convinced, powerful opponent of Home Rule, the chief among the fighting men of his party to be relied upon in every important contest to strike hard and fairly; and the eloquent advocate of Godfrey Isaacs, who denounced attacks on the Minister.

Cannot Separate Two.

The ordinary Englishman has too little imagination or subtlety to keep the two separate. He has limited patience with rules which assume that the parts are perfectly reconciliable. Rightly or wrongly many persons believe the purity of public life was involved in some questions lately discussed. They believe it to be lamentable if men of eminence to who for guidance the public look, are constrained at some turn of the discussion to say, "We cannot speak freely; our mouths, for professional reasons are sealed."

Buildings to be Added to Dry Dock Equipment

Yesterday, Mr. Sing, District Engineer of the Public Works Department, was in the city and in company with Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., inspected the site of the proposed dry dock, which is to be constructed near the canal in East City.

It is altogether probable that a considerable additional area of land will be required in order to afford room for storage buildings and carpenter shops on the canal. This will mean the erection of suitable buildings for the purpose and the expenditure of a large amount of money. The new dry dock will also mean that Peterborough will become the headquarters for repairing craft of every description on the canal, and the employment of considerable skilled labor. Much credit is due Mr. Burnham for securing the necessary appropriation for carrying on this work.

PAPERS IN THE GIBSON CASE ARE NOT YET QUITE READY

Many Petitions in Circulation Must be Got Through at Once--It Was Neccessrry to Postpone Meeting With Minister of Justice

Toronto, June 13.—Owing to the great amount of documentary evidence to be prepared, Mr. T. H. Lennox, K.C., counsel for Charles Gibson, was compelled to postpone his interview with the Minister of Justice, which was to have taken place at Ottawa this morning.

"I had arranged to leave last night for the Capitall" said Mr. Lennox, "but found it was impossible to prepare the papers in time. I have, therefore asked that the matter be postponed a week, and shall leav for Ottawa next Thursday without fail."

Get in Petitions.

In the meantime friends of the condemned man are anxious that the many petitions and subscription lists now in circulation be called in as early as possible. There are hundreds of these petitions still in the hands of those who are interested in securing a new trial. Some bear as man as thirty or forty names. These papers will be of no value, however unless in the proper hands when the application for a new trial is made.

Looking for a Witness.

Mr. Charles Gibson, father of the condemned youth said this morning that his son was hopeful and that hundreds of expressions of sympathy were a great blessing to the parents in this hard trial. He was to-day seeking to locate a man on Dundas street who is said to know something that might have an important bearing on the case.

VERY BRAVE DEED OF A LINDSAY BOY

Lindsay Warder: Master Aubrey Warner is but a lad of some 14 summers, but despite his youth, yesterday afternoon he demonstrated himself to be a young hero. At the risk of his own life he saved (just in the niche of time, and after others had failed) from the deep and fast running waters of the River Scugog little Miss Patricia Primeau.

It was a brave act. Never for an instant did the young lad flinch, but straight way on hearing that the little eight-year-old lady was in the bottom of the river he stripped off his outer garments and plunged into the chilly waters, but was unable to locate the body. Undaunted he again dived, and this time discovered the little tot, and despite the tight grip with which he was clutched by the drowning girl, Warner brought her safely to the surface and to the shore, where he was assisted up the bank by eager hands. Despite the fact that Miss Patricia went down for the third and last time, by prompt first aid methods administered by three local teachers, who witnessed the accident, life was resuscitated, and the little lady shortlt afterwards removed to her home. The little girl had fallen in whilst trying to recover her hat which had blown into the water.

PACKAGE OF GEMS WORTH $20,000 LOST

Macon, Ga., May 13.—An express package containing what is said to have been $20,000 worth of diamonds and other jewellery was shiped by Ries & Armstrong of this city to the New York jewellery firm of H. W. White & Co., several days aho, and when it arrived at its destination the package contained a few pieces of metal and scraps of paper. Detectives have been working on the case for several days. Today Southern Express route agents and 25 men who handled the package were here, the men being questioned. Eo trace of the missing diamonds has been found, and no arrests have been made.

QUEEN'S MAID OF HONOR MILITANT

London, June 13.—The Honorable Mabel Gye, one of Queen Mary's maids of honor and a keen sympathizer with the militant suffragettes, has presented a petition to the Queen purporting to represent the views of eight other ladies in the royal household, praying her majesty to cancel the rule recently made by the Queen that no member of her household must belong to the Women's Social Political Union, the militant suffragette organization.

The Queen, who is strongly opposed to the militants, has sent no reply to the petition, and Miss Gye has offered to resign her position in the royal household, but her resignation has not yet been accepted.

LINDSAY TO HAVE NEW MAGNETITE LAMPS

The little town of Lindsay is nothing if not enterprising. They are paving their principal streets and installing a modern system of public illumination. The town has accepted the offer of the Seymour Power Company to instal 18 magnetite lamps on Kent and William streets at $900 per year and 30 two-cluster lights to be erected on Williams st. south to the G.T.R. station and on Lindsay street north to the C.P.R. station via King or Queen street, at their own cost, the power company to supply free current for three years, and that the question be submitted to the ratepayers for their sanction at the coming January elections.

These magnetite lamps are the "last word" in street lighting. Lindsay seems, not only to have enterprise, but to have made a good bargain in her lights.

PETERBOROUGH LEADS COAL HANDLING PLANT

Mr. R. Hicks has many good qualities and among them is an enterprising spirit of progress in business. His new coal handling plant, at the corner of Charlotte and Bethune sts., is rapidly approaching completion. This plant is the "last word" in handling anthracite or hard coal, and reflects credit not only in Mr. Hicks but as a tribute to Peterborough's advance in modern ideas. The new building is 42 x 22 feet in size and 50 feet high. It will be used by receiving and delivering coal to the waggons which convey it to the customers. Let us follow the coal, as it arrives in the big iron cars now in vogue. The coal is dumped into a pit and conveyed, by hinge-back bucket elevators, handling 40 tons an hour. As the elevators carry the coal skyward they pass shoots, placed at intervals, and can be controlled so as to discharge their loads when required.

The whole building stands in 5 massive cement piers, between each of which is a driveway. These piers are 9 feet high. When coal is wanted for delivery waggons, it is discharged by gravity through shoots, at the end of which are steel screens, thus preventing dust being given to customers. The building is strongly constructed of 2 x 6 timber, nailed one on top of the other to a height of 35 feet. Above this it is frame. To save danger from lateral pressure of the immense weight of coal stored, the building is strengthened with steel rods at 5 foot intervals. The whole plant will be operated by a 7½ horse power electric motor, which is placed at the top of the building. The whole structure is adapted to allow impending enlargements and improvements.

BASEBALL

The Petes won again yesterday at Ottawa. The boys went out from the very start to defeat the Senators and were successful. The game was fast and many good spicy plays were pulled off. The batting also was of a high order. The final score was 7—4 in favor of the Petes.

A SWING BRIDGE OVER RIVER AT C.P.R.

We are pleased to be able to state that the Government, on the recommendation of Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., is likely to place a swing or draw in the present C.P.R. bridge across the Otonabee river, in order to afford navigation to points as far up as Hunter street. It will be remembered that considerable dredging has already been done between the C.P.R. bridge and the Quaker Oats Company's mills, which will soon be available to shippers and the public in general.

In addition to the above the waterfront on this side of the river will be put in good shape by having a stone or cement wall constructed north from the C.P.R. bridge.

From the above it will be seen that the question of the construction of a new overhead Hunter street bridge, sufficiently high to enable boats and barges to pass through underneath to the Quaker Oats Company's docks, cannot be much longer delayed.

MACHINE AFIRE IN AIR MAN IS TRAPPED; KILLED

Fell to Ground, Machine Being Torn Apart by Explosion—Was Very Wealthy.

Lima, Ohio, June 13.—Andrew Drew, a Chicago aviator, fell 200 feet while making a test flight near the Lima State Hospital late yesterday and was instantly killed. When in the air but a short time Drew shut off his motor and the men at the aviation grounds saw a red tongue of flame dart from the machine.

The flash of red at the rear of the machine increased and Drew evidently hoping to land in a field a half a mile away, made an emergency dip in an effort to save himself. The biplane hesitated for a moment, suddenly shot downward careening as it fell.

As the spectators ran across the fields to the wreck there was an explosion and the machine was torn apart.

Drew had evidently landed on his head. His skull was fractured and both arms and hips were broken.

Word of his death was sent to relatives in St. Louis. Drew was heir to a large fortune. He devoted himself to aviation, studying under Orville Wright, and had made flights all through the middle west.

BREATHING TIME ONLY SAY THE BANKERS OF DOMINION

Tight Money and Real Estate Situation the Disturbing Factors

Toronto, June 13.—The industrial and commercial situation in Canada is far from discouraging. There is pretty general agreement among locacal bankers and business men that fundamental conditions are absolutely sound. Mercantile business is good. Crop prospects are excellent. The two disturbing factors are international monetary complications and the real estate situation. Money is tight. The real estate boom of suburban property has spent itself. Admittedly Canadians have been going a little too fast and the present is but a breathing space. It is generally felt that the situation has been handled admirably by the banks, that the worst has been anticipated and discounted. Money will be tight for some time to come.

Fundamentally Sound.

Sir Edmund Osler, President of the Dominion Bank, expressed the prevailing view in the following short statement to-day:

"There unquestionably has been much over-speculation in town and suburban properties. As is inevitable in the case of wild speculation of any kind, a great deal of money is locked up here. Money is tight all over the world and will continue so for some time. The situation may not be serious and the people will get money if they are willing to pay for it. Increased rates must be expected. Fundamentally, conditions are sound. Business is good in all commercial and industrial lines and prices have been steadily advancing. The cost of doing business has increased about 50 per cent. within recent years."

FATHER GRADUATES IN CLASS WITH SON

Bloomington, Ind., June 13.—For the first time in the history of Indiana university, and it is believed for the first time in any college, a father Willis Hickam, of Spencer, Ind., will graduate next week in the same class from the law school, as his son, Hubert Hickam.

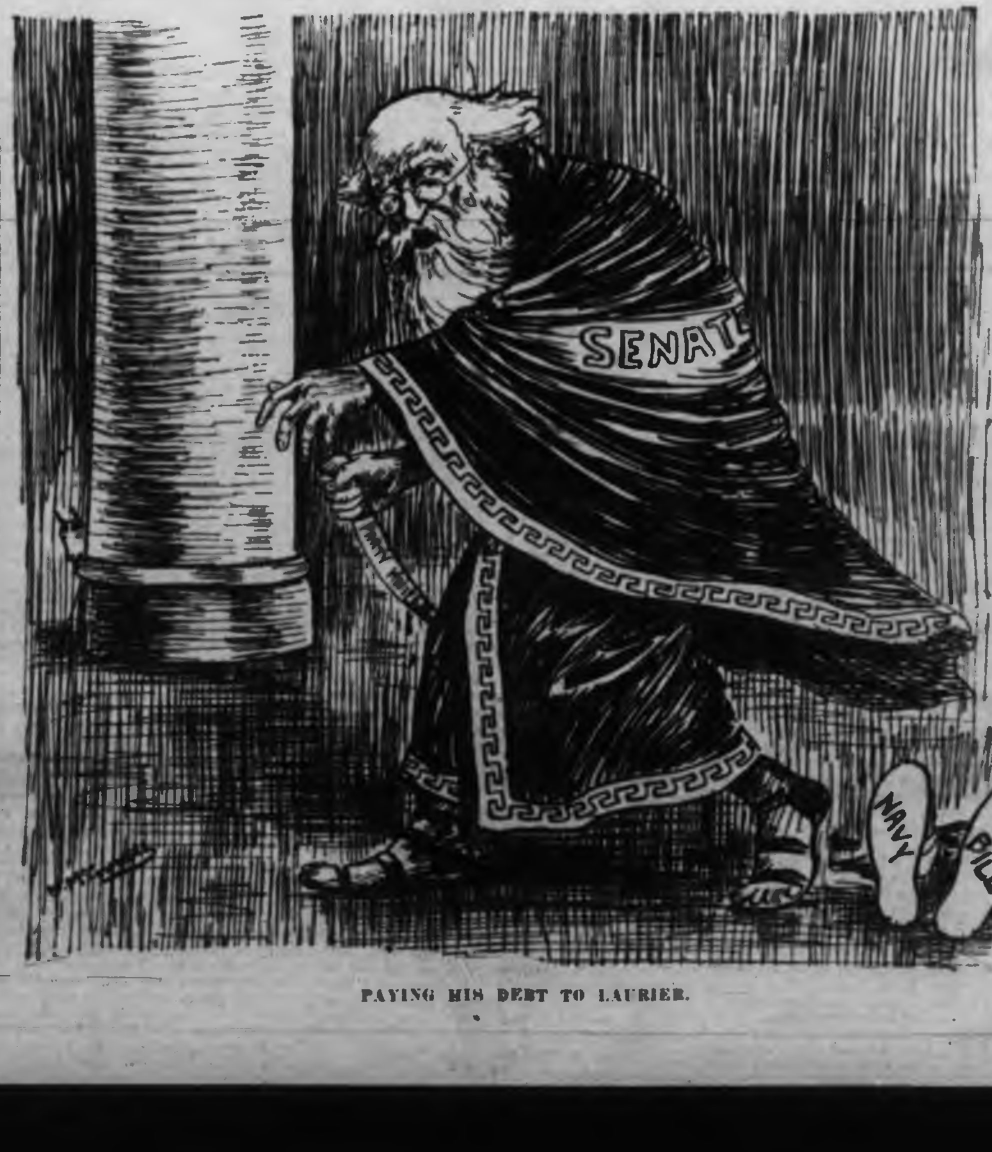
The father, a prominent lawyer, was a student in the institution in 1877 when it disbandoned. The school was not reorganized for 11 years and in the meantime the elder Hickam had finished his studies in a private office and became prominent in Indiana legal circles.

Recently he petitioned the board of trustees of the university to allow him to complete his course. The request was readily granted and Mr. Hickam re-entered the university in time to receive his diploma at the same time as his son.

WOMEN SOLDIERS

Budapest, June 13.—There is a possibility that limited franchise be granted to the women if the women agree ro military duty, as members of the sanitary corps and of the Red Cross Society.

As proved by the Balkan wars, women nurses without training are simply nuisances in the lazerettos. To be useful they must learn discipline and will have to undergo regular courses of instruction like soldiers of the line and in reserve.



PAYING HIS DEBT TO LAURIER.

MISSING GIRLS HAVE BEEN ACCOUNTED FOR BY POLICE

Officers Take Issue With Statement of Canon Hague Regarding White Slavery

Toronto, June 13.—A distinct and unqualified denial of the statements of Canon Dyson Hague regarding white slavery was made this morning by Inspector Gregory, Sergeant McKinney and the other officers of the Morality Department, including the women workers of the Department, whose special province is looking after girls and women of the city and protecting them from just the evils mentioned by the Canon.

"If Canon Hague knows of instances, why is it that he did not make any report to this department. If he and members of other church organizations know definitely of cases of white slavery they are condoning a crime in not putting the authorities in possession of such information as will enable us to take action," said Inspector Gregory.

"Do you have many complaints of missing girls in Toronto?" the Inspector was asked.

Missing Girls.

"Yes, we have numerous cases, and in every one we have discovered that the girl has left home of her own free will, sometimes of intolerable conditions at home, sometimes from depravity. There is not a house in Toronto, however, where a girl could be held without the knowledge of the police."

"The one chief cause of the reports of missing girls," he said, "was the custom of bringing in women from the old country for domestic service and advancing their fare to be paid back from their earnings. These girls after staying a short while at the place of employment to which they are sent find another place and wilfully conceal their new address in order to avoid payment of the money owing to the organization that brought them out."

"You would be safe in stating," said Sergeant McKinney, "that there is not one instance of a girl being sold into white slavery in Toronto for the past five years."

A Needed Change in Assessment Law

It has been represented to The Times that often difficulty is caused in the local assessment of property, which has changed hands, because the new owner is not credited on the assessor's books. We interviewed Mr. Henry regarding these complaints. He admits that he encounters such complaints but is unable, under existing conditions, to remedy them. If a by-law could be passed and enforced compelling the owner of property sold to notify the assessor when such sale takes place, it would result, in many cases, in property owners having the right to vote at municipal elections and on money by-laws who are now accidentally debarred.

DREAMLESS SLEEP.

Breslau, June 11.—Doctor Traugott, nerve specialist, is about to issue an interesting book showing that there is no dreamless sleep. Dreams, says the author, are quickly forgotten, as a rule, hence if a man tells you that he never dreams, most probably he states an unconscious truth.

Animals almost devoid of brains, sleep, and so do flowers. We don't think while sleeping; if we did we would not enjoy any rest.

LIFELESS BODY OF A YOUNG GIRL IS FOUND IN BUSHES

Her Mother Committed Suicide Several Years Ago, Daughter Was Despondent

Toronto, June 13.—The lifeless body of Hannah Wandley, aged 27, was found this morning in a clump of bushes on the Kingston road. It was evident that the young woman had ended her own life by taking carbolic acid. She had been employed for the past seven years at the home of Mrs. Thomas Kennedy on Kingston road and there was considerable mystery regarding her, so much in fact that when inquiries were made at the Kennedy residence this morning it was impossible to learn her surname. She has been very despondent at times and there is no reason to doubt that she ended her own existence.

Bottle Beside Body.

The girl left her home yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock and going up town visited Liggitt's drug store at 224 Yonge street, where she purchased the poison, stating she wanted it for cleaning purposes. She did not return home and the next heard of her was when James Charlton made the gruesome discovery this morning. Beside the body was an empty carbolic acid bottle which bore mute testimony to the tragedy.

County Constable Burns and Dr. A. F. Demary were summoned and on investigation the latter pronounced it a case of deliberate suicide and that no inquest was necessary.

Was Peculiar Girl.

Without any apparent recollection of relatives or friends except a casual reference to her mother, whom the girl had told Mr. Kennedy had taken her own life, the girl was alone in the world. The memory of her mother's rash deed at times evidently affected her reason. She was taken from the Haven on Seaton street by Mr. Kennedy some seven years ago and had never volunteered any information concerning herself except that her name was Hannah. She proved a good servant, but sometimes acted very strangely making frequent threats to end her life. The character given her by Mr. Kennedy is of the best. They say her disposition was amiable excepting for occasional outbursts of temper and a tendency to be strong willed. She is spoken of as a quiet girl and very faithful, seldom leaving the house, and spending her spare time in reading.

A RECORD MOTHER

Los Angeles, June 13.—Nineteen children, seventeen of whom she bore and two she adopted, have been reared by Mrs. May C. Koch, of this city. Yet she has undertaken the task of rearing another. A petition signed by Mrs. Koch for the adopfion of an 18-months-old girl, Helen Shirley, was made before Judge McCormick today.

"While I believe I have already done my duty," said the petitioner, "I might just as well rear an even score of them."

ENGLAND FEARS CHINESE MENACE

London, June 13.—While China has been beset by her great neighbors in the north and has been on the verge of bankruptcy, she has nevertheless found the time and means to continue to wage her war against the Tibetans of Eastern Tibet, and this in face of the protests of Great Britain.

Early this year the Tibetans succeeded in driving back the Chinese forces, capturing their rifles and mountain guns, and established themselves in a strong position. The Chinese have, however, not been discouraged by this reverse, and a stronger army, with better guns is advancing towards the Tibetan stronghold. Great Britain's protest against this advance has been floaten by the Chinese Government, and today England is demanding the withdrawal of all Chinese troops from Tibetan territory as the price of recognition of the Republic. England's fear, of course, is that a regenerated China in possession of Tibet would be a menace to India.

GAVE LIFE TO SAVE OTHERS.

Medicine Hat, June 13.—In a vain attempt to stop an auto which was headed for a steep cut bank at Eagle Butte yesterday in which were riding Mrs. Jas. Hassard and her infant daughter, George Mayberry met his death. At the time he jumped on the car he must have known that all chances were against him stopping it, still he stayed at the wheel and was instantly killed when the car turned turtle. The child was nearly drowned and Mrs. Hassard was badly injured.

HOME TREATMENT FOR SALLOW, WRINKLED SKIN

A. C. F. asks: "What should I do for my sallow complexion, and how can I get rid of my wrinkles?"

Sallowness is best removed by removing the skin itself. This is effectually accomplished by the use of ordinary mercolized wax, which causes the offensive outer skin gradually to peel off, in fine particles scarcely noticeable to the naked eye. Within a week or so you will have an enviable complexion, the new skin exhibiting a healthful, youthful tint incomparable with artificial coloring. Get an ounce of this wax at your drug store, apply at night like cold cream, only don't rug it in. Wash it off in the morning with warm water.

For your wrinkles try a solution of powdered saxolite, one ounce, dissolved in a half pint witch hazel. Bathe your face in this every morning for awhile. The result will surprise you.—Beauty Mirror.

PINE TAR CORDIAL

Advertisements under above heads, 20 words and under, one insertion, 15c.; 3 insertions, 25c.; 6 insertions, 40c.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 25c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 25c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 386 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

NERVOUS DEBILITY
Thousands of young and middle-aged men are annually swept to a premature grave through Early Indiscretions, Excesses and Blood Diseases. If you have any of the following symptoms consult us before it is too late. Are you nervous and weak, despondent and gloomy, specks before the eyes, with dark circles under them, weak back, kidneys irritable, palpitation of the heart, bashful, dreams and losses, sediment in urine, pimples on the face, eyes sunken, hollow cheeks, careworn expression, poor memory, lifeless, distrustful, lack energy and strength, tired mornings, restless nights, changeable moods, weak manhood, premature decay, bone pains, hair loose, sore throat, etc.

YOU WILL BE A WRECK
Our New Method Treatment can cure you and make a man of you. Under its influence the brain becomes active, the blood purified, so that all pimples, blotches and ulcers disappear, the nerves become strong as steel, so that nervousness, bashfulness and despondency vanish, the eye becomes bright, the face full and clear, energy returns to the body and the moral, physical and sexual systems are invigorated; all drains cease—no more vital waste from the system. Don't let quacks and fakirs rob you of your hard earned dollars. We will cure you or no pay.

CORTEX OF GURLICK

Strange Diagnosis of a Prospective Bridegroom's Complaint by a Supposed Doctor.

By GEORGE MUNSON.

Three months before his marriage Charles Bannon began to put in overtime. This is a phenomenon by no means rare among prospective husbands, and is usually viewed indulgently by their employers, even though it means a double salary at the end of the month. But Bannon's savings were scanty and the furniture had to be paid for.

"Charles, you must positively stop," declared his fiancee, Marian Janes, when a month's overwork and lack of exercise had showed itself in the young man's pale and trembling hands. "I'm not going to have you kill yourself, dear, for that horrid old furniture. How is that insomnia you were telling me about?"

"Pretty bad, Marian," admitted her lover. "I think I shall go to a doctor about it."

"Go to Dr O'Keefe," answered Marian promptly. "He is the greatest nerve and brain specialist in the city. Esther Carter was telling me how he cured her brother of neurasthenia. Philip Carter was completely unbalanced until Dr. O'Keefe took him in hand, and now he's almost rational. And I'm not going to have you become unbalanced," she pouted, and sealed her advice with a kiss.

That was how Bannon came to visit the great specialist. He entered the comfortable waiting room in trepidation. It was not O'Keefe's regular hour, but the maid thought he would be in shortly. Would he wait? Bannon waited, turning over the leaves of a six months' old magazine aimlessly, and gradually becoming convinced that all of his symptoms were aggravated ones. Suddenly the doctor appeared at the door.

He was quite a young man — much younger than Bannon had expected. But then of course all the great specialists in every branch of work were young men nowadays. O'Keefe was hardly thirty, and he looked excessively tired, as though his work had almost unstrung him.

"Did He Charge You Anything."

"Come right in, sir," he said cheerfully, and Bannon followed him into his cosy office at the back of the house, where he took a chair and began to describe his symptoms. Dr. O'Keefe listened with his lips pursed and the fingers of his right hand pressed against those of his left.

"You say your head aches often?" the doctor asked.

"Yes, right here," answered the visitor, and O'Keefe rose and gently moved his fingers to the spot indicated.

"A shooting pain—a sort of gyrating pain?" he asked.

"Yes," answered Bannon. "Is it anything serious?"

O'Keefe sat down, wrote out a prescription, and suddenly tore it up. "You are not married?" he asked.

"Not yet," said Bannon, blushing. "I hope to be in March."

Dr. O'Keefe arose again and placed a fatherly hand upon the young man's shoulder. "Go home," he said, "and write to her that you have changed your mind, and do not want to see her again."

"Why?" said Bannon, feeling his heart leap and then flutter wildly.

"Because you can't live three weeks," answered the specialist. "That pain is Gurlick's convolution. It means atrophy of the breathing center. When the cortex is invaded you will drop—just drop. You will know nothing. There is no hope—I may as well be frank with you. You will live not less than 17 days, and not more than 23."

Bannon got up and faced the specialist. He was breathing heavily. "You've got it figured out accurately, doctor?" he said.

"Yes. Banta and Gurlick compiled a table of mortality from this rare disease. No, there is no possibility of a mistake. Ten dollars, please—and, my dear fellow, go home and write that letter."

Bannon did not write that letter. It was not that he doubted, but he preferred to die truthfully and not like a liar. He did not think Marian would want to think him disloyal. And, then —famous as O'Keefe undoubtedly was, even the shrewdest doctor sometimes erred. So he said nothing, but he went on working overtime, because the time was so short now that nothing mattered very much.

So the days crept on; the week went round, the second began, and ran to its close. He had now from three to nine days to live. Yet the pain seemed an insignificant thing, certainly no worse. It was a mere headache—surely O'Keefe was wrong? Sometimes he could not feel it at all. And yet, under the cap of the skull that deadly wasting was continuing, eating away towards the cortex of Gurlick. Then it would reach it and he would drop—he would just cease to breathe. The thought of Marian bereft turned him sick at night.

"Dearest, what did the doctor say?" she asked. And he put her off with some triviality. But he could not entirely hide his fears from her, and she watched him with increasing concern.

The third week ended. The twenty-second day went by. On the next Bannon felt better than he had felt for weeks. The time limit was gone, and he still lived. He resolved to have his jest with the doctor. On the evening of the twenty-third day he went to his house. This time the sitting room was filled. But, hearing voices in the hall, he peered out, and saw O'Keefe talking with a middle-aged, bespectacled, bearded patient, and, suddenly forgetful of the others who should have preceded him, he ran into the hall.

"Well, doctor, you're wrong," he cried to O'Keefe. "You gave me not less than 17 days to live, and not more than 23, and the time limit expired this afternoon. You'd better make another diagnosis."

"Will you have the goodness to wait your turn, sir, and sit in the reception room?" asked the bearded man severely.

"Will you be so kind as to mind your own business, sir?" returned Bannon, nettled. "My business is with this gentleman here."

The younger man turned round.

"I have never, to my knowledge, had any business with you, sir," he said.

"Oh, yes, doctor," answered Bannon. "Twenty-three days and five hours ago you set a time limit upon my life, and here I am alive all the same."

The bearded man was smiling now —a cynical, mocking, yet human smile. "I think that I begin to understand," be said. "Good-bye Philip. You're certainly cured now." He turned to Bannon. "Won't you come in, sir?" he asked courteously. "I am Doctor O'Keefe."

"You?" stammered Bannon. "Why, that gentleman is Doctor O'Keefe. He examined me three weeks ago and told me I had atrophy of Gurlick's convolution."

The other clapped him on the back and laughed noisily. "Poor fellow—poor fellow!" he said. "That's Mr. Carter, a patient of mine. He has been a little irrational, and I suppose he got into my office and played my part. Gurlick's convolution? Oh, yes, he must just have been reading of that in the 'Medical Record,' but it is a disease that only affects sheep in the tropics. I wonder," he continued thoughtfully, "how many other people Philip has scared. Did he charge you anything?"

"Ten dollars," Bannon replied.

"Ah!" said the other, "that's very promising. I think he must be cured."

What will be the final effect upon Islam of the recent Balkan war? One rather significant fact is that in Macedonia already 12,000 Mohammedans have asked for Christian baptism. Islam long ago appealed to the sword and won. Now she has appealed to the sword and lost. Will the faith of the followers be able to stand the strain of this disquieting fact?

OUTLAWING POVERTY

The movement to find a genuine remedy for poverty is gaining momentum throughout the world. The most gigantic step in this direction is that contemplated in the United Kingdom where the Asquith Government, backed by the Labor party and to some extent by Nationalists, has recently introduced a statutory minimum wage bill which will set a minimum wage for workers in the British Isles. With the pressure of Parliamentary business it is hardly possible that the bill will be fully considered, or that it will become law during the present session, but the important fact is that the first really consequential move toward outlawing poverty has been taken.

Massachusetts, in the United States, has already passed a minimum wage act, applying to women employed in certain trades. The same state has now under consideration a plan to pension indigent and widowed mothers.

These instances show the trend of thought and action. The problem of wiping out poverty is a tremendous one, yet to a very large extent it is not hopeless. Great Britain is this year spending fifty million pounds on education, old-age pensions, workmen's insurance and similar social services, all designed to outlaw poverty.

THE PARCELS POST

Before the close of the present year there will be ready for operation in Canada a Parcel Post system that gives every promise of being the most progressive policy of the kind in use in any province. In the House of Commons, Postmaster Pelletier gave a general outline of the plans of his department for a Parcels Post. Simplicity of system and a minimum of "red tape" are the lines upon which the Parcels Post is to be developed.

The postal department has apparently given close study to the problem, and at the outset it is determined to avoid the mistaues made by other countries which have adopted the Parcels Post in recent years. Canada will not be handicapped with an unending series of zones and a multiplicity of rates that make the system so perplexing to post office officials and the public in the United States. Each province will comprise tKo zones for local post. The first rate will cover a twenty mile radius, while the second zone takes in the remainder of each individual province. Interprovincial rates will be determined by provincial zones. The advantages of this system are apparent. Instead of dozens and dozens of scales we will not have more than eight.

The maximum size and weight of parcels, seventy-two inches in length and girth combined and eleven pounds in weight, place the policy on a practical basis. The rates to be charged remain to be struck. If the government displays the same good judgment in fixing them that it has manifested in the preliminary survey of the general policy, Canadians may well look forward in pleasing anticipation to the inauguration of the Parcels Post.

It should not be forgotten that a great deal of detail must be attended to before the innovation can be operated. The entire system of handling mails must be enlarged. More mail cars wi,l have to be secured; more carriers must be obtained and a general extension of the rural service will follow the introduction of the policy.

If you have any stomach distress at all you will certainly be interested in the following experience which is told by Mr. Edward Dawkins:

"When I was working around the farm last winter I had an attack of inflammation," writes Mr. E. P. Dawkins, of Port Richmond. "I was weak for a long time but well enough to work until spring. But something went wrong with my bowels, for I had to use salt or physic all the time. My stomach kept sour and always after eating there was pain and fullness and all the symptoms of intestinal indigestion. Nothing helped me until I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills Instead of hurting, like other pills, they acted very mildly, and seemed to heal the bowels. I did not require large doses to get results with Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and feel so glad that I have found a mild yet certain remedy. To-day I am well—no pain, no sour stomach, a good appetite, able to digest anything. This is a whole lot of good for one medicine to do, and I can say Dr. Hamilton's Pills are the best pills, and my letter I am sure, proves it."

OUR TAX RATE.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I have read with pleasure your article [illegible] Tax Rate," appearing recently, and I am glad to note that it is your intention to send a special commissioner to eight or ten towns of Ontario to investigate assessment conditions. I hope you will be able to see your way clear to do this at once, rather than in the near future, and may I suggest that information be gathered at the same time with regard to the "ever-increasing" number of small items ranging from ten cents up to $6.63 appearing in our assessment accounts. I think it will be found that these auxiliary items of taxation will amount to more than three mills on the dollar. It is true with regard to the one before me. In view of the fact that a paving scheme is likely to be placed before the ratepayers involving probably another adjunct, comparison of these details would be instructive when your report is published, in connection with the assessment matters which you propose to investigate.

I agree with the Mayor's ideas regarding other factories from which he has tentative offers to locate here. No doubt these would be very desirable to have; but I agree with you that it is unwise to continue bonusing them, or as your suggest, bribing them—a wrong principle to start with—when the cheaper power anticipated under Hydro-Electric should be sufficient nourishment alone, not to mention our abundant railway facilities readily at command.

I am pleased to see your commendation of the progressiveness and ability of Mayor Bradburn in the administration of civic affairs, and may I express the hope, in which I trust you are in agreement, that he will continue at least for another term as Peterborough's Chief Magistrate. After all is said and done, we desire those new industries which are now shelved, pro tem, believing that Mayor Bradburn can still land them along lines governed by sound principles, and especially give us a good government of our municipal matters at a time when an effective administration is badly needed

SLIPPING AWAY.

They are slipping away—these sweet, swift years,
Like a leaf on the current cast:
With never a break in their rapid flow,
We watch them as one by one they go
Into the beautiful past.

As silent and swift as a weaver's thread,
Or an arrow's flying gleam;
As soft as the languorous breezes hid
That lift the willow's long golden lid
And ripple the glassy stream.

As light as the breath of the thistle-down;
As fond as a lover's dream:
As pure as the flush in the sea-shell's throat,
As sweet as the wood-bird's wooing note,
So tender and sweet they seem.

One after another we see them pass
Down the dim lighted stair;
We hear the sound of their steady tread
In the steps of the centuries long since dead,
As beautiful and as fair.

There are only a few years left to love;
Shall we waste them in idle strife?
Shall we trample them under our ruthless feet
Those beautiful blossoms, rare and sweet,
By the dusty way of life?

There are only a few swift years—ah, let
No envious taunts be heard;
Make life's fair pattern of rare design,
And fill up the measure with love's sweet wine,
But never an angry word!

STOVE HEATS MANY IRONS

Shelves Along Sides of Fire Box Accomodate Extra Lot

A Kentucky man has designed a stove for laundry purposes that will heat 14 flatirons at once. At the same time he has attached a boiler to it, so that water can be heated at the same time the irons are without any waste of heat. The fire box of this stove has heavy cast iron side linings which take up the heat. Along both sides are shelves, each of which holds four eight-pound irons, points up, with their bottoms against the stove and in direct contact with the heated portion. These shelves account for eight of the 14 irons which constitute the heating capacity of the stove, the other six being heated on top in the ordinary way. In front the stove has a drop door, fitted so that no air can get in when it is closed. Altogether, this stove appears to be just what is needed in laundries.

COULD NOT BE KICKED

Magistrate Apologises to Prisoner for His Limited Power

A remarkable story of an old convict's adventures was told at Manchester where George Roland Williams was committed for a month for impersonating a policeman.

Williams called at two houses in Ancoats, representing that he was an officer looking for a man who, he stated, had been "drawing a dead man's pension for two years." He was arrested, and an officer told the stipendiary that Williams, after being put in the cells, had to be taken to Ancoats Hospital, but, he said, he was only shamming. Williams represented that he was suffering from hemorrhage and bled at the mouth, but a doctor at the hospital found the blood had been caused by Williams pricking his nostril with a piece of wire. Williams pleaded that he had no evil design. It was a piece of foolishness for which he ought to be kicked.

The Stipendiary: "I am afraid we are not allowed to sentence you to be kicked."

It was stated that on one occasion Williams, by representing himself to be a doctor, had induced a young lady to marry him.

Coming and Going

THE smooth, clean, economical concrete road is coming—as certainly as the railroad, the steamship and the telegraph came.

And the muddy, sticky, deep-rutted dirt and macadam road is going—as surely as the stage-coach, the sailing ship and the spinning-wheel have gone.

It's simply a question of which communities will take advantage of the better, modern way of building roads now—enjoying its benefits from now on—and which ones will continue to "get along" in the poor old way until forced by competition to avail themselves of science's latest contribution to public convenience.

Concrete Roads

are not experiments. There is no "chance" taken with their adoption. They have been quietly proving their value for twenty years. Concrete roads built twenty years ago, when concrete construction was nothing like so far advanced as it is to-day, are still giving absolutely satisfactory service.

Concrete roads have proven themselves best—under all sorts of conditions, from the standpoints of both service and economy. Their first cost is near that of good macadam, their service is greatly superior, and their final cost—the only one to consider in comparing roads—is a great deal less.

These are strong statements. They might be stronger and then not over-state the truth. Concrete roads "back them up" with facts—facts that prove concrete to be the best and cheapest material for road construction—either for city streets or country highways.

Many Canadian counties and cities are already using concrete pavements. Many others are preparing to do so as fast as they can.

They will be enjoying the many advantages that good roads bring, while others who stand by the "poor old way" with its mud and ruts and expense and repairs are waiting—for what?

Every citizen should have the information on concrete roads which we will send free upon request.

SEEKS ALIMONY AFTER 29 YEARS

Cambridge Woman Sues Man She Divorced in 1884.

Boston, June 13.—Whether alimony can be granted to a woman 29 years after she won her divorce the supreme court was asked to decide in a petition brought yesterday by Elizabeth C. Waldo, of Cambridge against her former husband, John A. Waldo, of Winthrop.

Mrs. Waldo divorced her husband for alleged desertion on April 29, 1884, in the supreme court. She asked for no alimony for herself at the time. She is asking for it now. But the court ordered Waldo to pay her $15 a week for the support of her son, John, then 14 years old, up to Oct. 1, 1884, and thereafter $12.50 per week till he reached the age of 16. By mutual agreement the amount was reduced to $10 per week.

Not only did Waldo make the payments the court ordered, but he continued to pay $10 a week to his son by his former wife till that son was 42 years old. He discontinued payment on Feb. 1 of the present year. He paid the son 26 years more than he had to.

Mrs. Waldo in the petition brought yesterday says she has no property or means of support. She says her former husband has property and is able to pay her a substantial sum.

Judge Braley put the matter over till June 24.

YALE

Look for the Name Yale on Locks and Hardware

The worst thing about a spring door is the slam. It's bad for the nerves and bad for the door. Yet without a spring, a door almost never gets closed. That means draughts, noises, dust and other annoyances. The way out of it all is the Yale Door Check. It is a door closer without a slam. It closes a door quietly, but positively—a quick swing to the closing point, then a steady, relentless push until the door latches.

Any good hardware dealer can show you Yale Products. Yale Locks and Hardware sold in Canada are now made in Canada.

CENTRAL PARK
TRANSCONA

The best money maker of a money making industrial town. The G. T. P. Shops here have already cost $6,000,000.00 and other industries are rapidly making this town the industrial centre of Western Canada. Thousands of mechanics, tradesmen, clerks, and workmen of all kinds will be employed here as soon as all these industries start operations. Now is the time to invest before values go too high. Central Park offers the best investment in Transcona because :—

Central Park is in the centre of the incorporated Town ; this means that Central Park will have all improvements as soon as any other part of the town.

Central Park has electric power right at hand.

The G.T.P. Main Line runs through the South end of Central Park, affording good trackage for manufacturers.

The Town is making arrangements to use the G. T. P. trunk sewer, Central Park is the only subdivided property through which this sewer passes.

Central Park prices are lower than any other Transcona property.

balance in 24 monthly payments. Your lot will more than double by the time you have it all paid for. Other terms can be arranged.

Central Park is located right in the path of Transcona's greatest development, across the street are the G. T. P. shops and station, the north side is bounded by the main road to Winnipeg ; and the main road to St. Boniface on the south ; while King Street, which runs the full length of the property on the East, is the only access to the station, and the only street from the north to the south of the shops. Make enquiries before you buy any Transcona property and you will find that Central Park offers the very best investment. Write to-day for folder showing location, plan and price list, don't let anything keep you from making this investment.

MOTOR.

W. A. Stevens, Boston agent for the National, is showing to his friends some photographs which he took on his recent trip from Boston to Indianapolis. Some of them show the car more than hub deep in mud, and though from the photographs it looked as though the car was stuck, Stevens said that it pulled out of even the worst places on its own power.

YATCHING.

Philadelphia, June 13.—Yachting and motor boat men here are anxiously awaiting, but thus far without success, word from the three motor boats that are now somewhere between this port and Bermuda engaged in the annual race under the auspices of the Yachtsmen's Club of this city. Under the deed of gift it is necessary to have four starters in the race. Only three were sent away upon the long journey Saturday morning so that yesterday the officials formally started Tee II. down the course in order to comply with the deed conditions. Tee II. went only about 40 miles and then turned back, according to the prearranged plan.

RING.

Boston, June 13.—Three hard ten-round bouts of boxing were witnessed at the Atlas A. A. last night, one of which was boxed for no-decision between Joe Eagan of South Boston and K. O. Sweeney of New York. Eagan was in doubt about his condition, and was on the point of refusing to box until the no-decision plan was suggested. Sweeney had a slight lead at the end of the 10 rounds by virtue of his heavy body punching and aggressiveness.

The final match, between Charley Ledoux of France and Philly McGovern of New York, was called a draw, after Ledoux did about as he pleased for the best part of the 10 rounds. Ledoux may hold the championship of France, but he will have to show American followers a better brand of boxing than he did against McGovern if he cares to have himself taken seriously as a contender for the world's title.

Frankie Mack earned the decision in 10 rounds over Terry Brooks, the New York light-weight.

Patsy Green beat Franckie McManus in six rounds.

Gloucester, June 13.—Joe Chick of Fall River beat Joe Farren of East Boston in 10 rounds at the Gloucester S. and A. C. tonight, only to lose the fight by having the referee call it a draw. Kid Reagan of this city, knocked out Johnny Noonan of Salem in the first round. Georgeie Mack of Amesbury beat Jack Morgan of Beverly in four round.

LACROSSE.

The new captain of the Harvard lacrosse team is Percival F. Brundage, '14, of Brooklyn, who was elected to the position at the Saturday night lacrosse dinner at the Hotel Brunswick. Brundage "prepped" at Adelphi academy, Brooklyn, and engaged in his first lacrosse on the Harvard freshman team of 1911, playing centre. This was his first year as a veteran on the 'varsity team, and he played a fast game at third attack, shooting more goals than any other member of the Harvard squad.

KNIFE SHARPENER

Guide Holds Blade in Right Position Against Wheel

A knife sharpening tool by which an inexperienced person can put a fine edge on a blade has been designed by a Wisconsin man. A grinding wheel clamps to the edge of a table and is turned by a handle. A tool rest is mounted in front of this wheel so that projections come up along both sides. This rest acts as a guide and holds the knife firmly in such position that a proper bevel is assured. Of course, the blade is sharpened on the side facing the wheel, which grinds it down. As the wheel turns from the operator, there is no danger of the knife being jammed between it and the guide, as it continually lifts the knife. Grinding by the side of the wheel gives a finer, smoother edge than could be obtained by grinding on the top. The guide will also hold scissors so they can be sharpened correctly.

AMERICAN INAUGURALS

In the First Ceremony the Bible Was Forgotten

It is recorded that when Washington was inaugurated, the ceremony taking place in New York, which was reached after a somewhat spectacular trip up the river, the chief event was the singing of an ode set to the tune of "God Save the King." The Senate of the day was greatly [illegible] as to whether the members should sit or stand while the President was taking the oath of office, and in the confusion the necessary Bible was forgotten. One was borrowed from a Masonic lodge, and the ceremony proceeded. The second inauguration was even quieter, the President with his knee breeches and diamond shoe buckles being the only real spectacle. The Adams ceremonial was simple enough, but not simple enough, apparently, to suit Thomas Jefferson, who rode on horseback to the Capitol, without a single guard or even a servant, dismounted without assistance, and hitched his horse to the fence. James Madison had the militia on parade when he was inaugurated, and guns boomed as he entered the Capitol. It was Madison who gave the first Inaugural Ball. The crush was so great that many women fainted, and, it being impossible to raise the windows, they were broken in order to supply air to the fainting guests. As the years advanced, more thought was taken of the spectacle, and of the comfort of the dancers, and when Monroe went to the White House he was able to entertain 8,000 guests without anybody finding it necessary to indulge in a swoon. His second inauguration was spoiled by rain. John Quincy Adams sought to show the sort of democrat he was by wearing a suit manufactured by American tailors out of American wool at his inaugural. Andrew Jackson started the handshaking habit, and his reception was a sort of "rough house" affair. Because of jealousy between rival promoters Van Buren had two Inaugural Balls. There was a ball following Lincoln's first inauguration, but the President did not appear, this being the only time on record when the function was not graced by the presence of the Chief Executive.

FIRST TIME IN AMERICA

WOMAN CARRIED LIQUOR IN ARTIFICIAL BUST

Numerous, peculiar, and ingenious have been the methods of secretly getting liquor through to the mining camps of Northern Ontario, but one discovered at South Porcupine, takes the palm for novelty. The authorities acting on information they had received stopped and searched a woman after she had alighted from the train. She was found to be wearing an artificial bust manufactured out of tin or galvanized iron, and containing no less than two gallons of the raw spirit. She also wore a belt containing a further two gallons of liquor. The police confiscated the liquor, but allowed her to go.

HAIR, TEETH, TOES

Chicago Professor Says These in Time Will Disappear

Prof. Frederick Starr, of the Department of Anthropology of the University of Chicago, told the class that some time in the future, hair, teeth and the little toes would be missing from the members of the human race.

"Pre-digested foods, hats and shoes have rendered hair, teeth and the little toe useless," he said. "The time will come when the man, woman or child possessing these will be a curiosity.

"The natural man needs hair as a defence and protection against the struggles of primitive life. We with our hats and our civilization do not need it. Persons with a scant supply of hair seem to die out among primitive peoples, but in civilization they increase.

"If teeth and hair and the little toes are to be preserved then it will be necessary for the civilized inhabitants of this world to get back to nature as soon as possible."

A NORTHERN HORROR

Insane From Hunger a Man Killed And Partly Ate Companion

Tortured by the furies of an Alaskan winter, subsisting thirty days on skins of dead animals, and finally driven insane by an eight-day period of starvation, Henry Leclaire, a French trapper, killed and partly ate the body of Len. Lemieux, declared to have been a guide of the Hudson Bay Company, near Mile 53, British Columbia. Such is the tale unfolded in a letter. Leclaire and Lemieux tasted no morsel of any kind for eight days on an extended hunt. In a deserted shack, 75 miles from the settlement, each man waited for the other to sleep, for the killing of one meant food for the other. Lemieux was killed, however, being stabbed in the heart eight times. Twenty-three other wounds were also inflicted. Part of the body was eaten, while Leckwith scratched the story on the cabin with his knife. Leclaire has not been found.

As Children Do

Sometimes when night is creeping down
And all the world is dim,
And he must go to Sleepytown,
You lie down at the side of him
And whisper soothing little things
In childish words, such as your fame
To tell the sound of beetle wings,
And how the firefly gets its flame.

And soon the world grows darker yet
And to the little fellow's eyes
Strange, hidden dangers now beset
The shadow places in the skies;
But you speak low and comforting
And tell him none of them are
But what is kind and good and fair.

Then trembling come his little hands
Out through the dark and find your face,
As though by touch he understands
That he is in the safest place;
And so with fingers on your cheek
He sighs contentedly to sleep—
And you—you may not even speak,
So very, very still you keep.

Some time you, as a little child,
Shall fare into an unknown night
And shall yearn for the stars that smiled
With all their soothing, drowsy light;
And you, as little children do,
May grope out through the darks of space
And sigh in peace to sleep, when you
At last have touched your Father's face.

FARMER BLAMED FOR ROTTEN EGGS

Washington, June 13.—Convinced that means could be found to overcome the loss of several millions of dollars a year in the egg industry, the department of agriculture has just completed an extensive inquiry into the causes for bad and addled eggs. In a statement issued to-day the investigation fix the blame on the farmers and poultry men.

"The greatest part of the loss is due mainly to ignorance or indifference on the part of the farmer and producer," says the report, "and only a small part is caused by carelessness on the part of the buyer and shipper."

The department urges the observance of five simple rules in the conduct of the egg industry, as follows:

Give the hens clean nests.

Gather eggs at least once daily.

Keep eggs in a cool, dry place.

Market eggs at least twice a week.

Kill or sell all mature male birds as soon as the hatching season closes.

LIQUOR AT A BAZAAR

A Magistrate Said an Application for This Was not Creditable.

Upon an application for an occasional license for the sale of intoxicants at a bazaar in connection with Holy Trinity Church, Abergavenny made to the local Bench, Alderman E. Foster, one of the magistrates said it was not creditable to any Christian Church to make such an application and he certainly would not give a silent vote of consent to the license being granted.

He thought the sale of intoxicants and the cure of souls very strange bedfellows, and he opposed the application in the hope of saving Holy Trinity Church from such an unholy alliance.

The Mayor of Abergavenny, who presided over the Bench, in granting the application, said although he was not a teetotaler he was a strong advocate of temperance, but he thought that provision should be made for those who desired to have something to take with their suppers. He knew precaution would be taken against immoderate use of the license.

SICK ROOM HINT

Time Marker in the Medicine Bottle Saves Lots of Worry

This time indicator on a medicine bottle is a convenient thing to have so that the hour when the next dose is to be taken can be known. A small strip of paper is marked with figures from 1 to 12 and pasted around the neck of the bottle so that the figures will plainly show the hours and half hours. A pin is then pressed into the cork of the bottle.

When a dose of medicine is given the time for the next dose is marked by the adjustment of the pin in the cork over the proper figure. In cases where different kinds of medicines are given at different hours a series of bottles equipped with these markers is a great convenience in the sick room.

AS TO TRAIN FLIRTATIONS

Drummer Gave Fatherly Advice to a Talkative Young Woman, and Was Rewarded.

"Fifteen years on the road and not a flirtation yet, is my record," said the needle and thread drummer. "The only time a beauty ever spoke to me on the train was down in West Virginia on the way to Wheeling.

"'Do you know what time we get there?' she inquired.

"'Six-thirty,' I told her.

"'You know,' she continued, 'I was never on a train before. It seems so strange to me!'

"To make a long story short, she was the kind you read about in books, but seldom meet in real life—the real innocent flower. When we got to Wheeling I put her on the car for Pittsburgh, her destination, and gave her some fatherly advice about speaking to strangers.

"About three months later I was unpacking the sample trunk after the long trip when the stock boy said there was some one down stairs to see me. There stood the girl and her father, who was a judge down in his own state.

"'I wish to thank you, sir, for your kindness to my daughter while traveling,' he said warmly.

"I assured him it was nothing unusual, but he thought otherwise and insisted on my taking dinner with him that evening."

"And since then you have wondered who she was?" put in the button man.

"No," said the needle and thread drummer. "She's my wife now."

Cause for Turkey Shortage.

Every one of the boarders was tussling with the question: "Why are turkeys scarce and high this season?"

At length the star boarder came forward with this solution: "You see, the turkeys are very fond of apple orchards. This was a good year for apples. While the fowl(s) were out scratching in the apple orchard, the numerous apples falling from the trees hit the turkeys on the heads, killing them. Hence the present scarcity."

A long silence followed this information. Then the cheerful idiot remarked mildly: "I had attributed the turkey shortage to fatalities from over exercise in the turkey trot."—Hartford Times.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER VI.

The Confidence of Edith Varney.

Mrs. Varney had, of course, divined toward whom Arrelsford's suspicion pointed. She had been entirely certain before he had mentioned the name that the alleged spy or traitor could be none other than her daughter's friend; indeed, it would not be stretching the truth to say that Thorne was her friend as well as her daughter's, and her keen mother's wit was not without suspicion that if he were left to himself, or if he were permitted to follow his own inclinations, the relation between himself and the two women might have been a nearer one still and a dearer one, yet, nevertheless, the shocking announcement came to her with sudden, sharp surprise.

We may be perfectly certain, absolutely sure, of a coming event, but when it does occur its shock is felt in spite of previous assurance. We may watch the dying and pray for death to end anguish, and know that it is coming, but when the last low breath has gone, it is as much of a shock to us as if it had not been expected, or even dreamed of.

The announcement of the name was shattering to her composure. She knew very well why Arrelsford would rejoice to find Thorne guilty of anything, and she would have discounted any ordinary accusation that he brought against him, but the train of the circumstances was so complete in this case and the coincidences so unexplainable upon any other theory, the evidence so convincing, that she was forced to admit that Arrelsford was fully justified in his suspicion, and that without regard to the fact that he was a rejected suitor of her daughter's.

"Attack Tonight. Plan 2. Use Telegraph," She Read.

Surprise, horror and conviction lodged in her soul, and were mirrored in her face. Arrelsford saw and divined what was passing in her mind, and, eager to strike while the iron was hot, bent forward open-mouthed to continue his line of reasoning and denunciation, but Mrs. Varney checked him. She laid her finger upon her lips and pointed with the other hand to the front of the house.

"What!" exclaimed the Confederate secret service agent; "is he there?"

Mrs. Varney nodded.

"He may be. He went out to the summer-house some time ago to wait for Edith; they were going over to Caroline Mitford's later on. I saw him go down the walk."

Sanol's Remedies

THE SANOL MFG. CO.,
WINNIPEG.
Jan. 22, 1912.

Dear Sirs.—
In regard to the sale of SANOL & SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, might say I have been handling the goods for about three months. I was [illegible] SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES to supply one of my customers, who is now completely cured, and whom, I believe, has sent a testimonial to your office. Another customer ordered SANOL and I was obliged to stock it. This gentleman was so well satisfied that he has sent bottles to his friends. Up to this time I had never really taken much interest in the preparations but when customer after customer would come in and tell me about what SANOL had done for them, I came to the conclusion it would be worth my while getting behind SANOL and recommending it to my customers. This I have done and I have heard nothing but words of praise for SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, I am.
Yours truly,
F. J. H. HAMLYN,

greatly perturbed at this unexpected development.

"I don't know. They were all at the back windows. They didn't seem to make much noise, I suppose not. You have a description of the man for whom the letter was intended?"

"Yes, at the office; but I remember it perfectly."

"Does it fit this—this Captain Thorne?"

"You might as well know sooner or later, Mrs. Varney, that there is no Captain Thorne. This is an assumed name, and the man you have in your house is Lewis Dumont."

"Do you mean he came here to—"

"He came to this town, to this house," said Arrelsford vindictively, his voice still subdued but full of fury, "knowing your position, the influence of your name, your husband's rank and service, for the sole purpose of getting recognized as a reputable person, so that he would be less likely to be suspected. He has corrupted your servants—you saw old Jonas—and he has contrived to enlist the powerful support of your daughter. His aim is the war department telegraph office. He is friendly with the men at that office. What else he hasn't done or what he has, the Lord only knows. But Washington is not the only place where they have a secret service; we have one at Richmond. Whatever game he plays, it is one that two can play; and now it is my play."

The patter of light footsteps was heard on the stairs, a flash of white seen through the open door into the hall dimly lighted, and Edith Varney came rapidly, almost breathlessly, into the room. She had changed her dress, and if Caroline Mitford had been there, she would have known certainly from the little air of festivity about her clean but faded and darned, sprigged and flowered white muslin frock that she was going to accept the invitation. In one hand she held her hat, which she swung carelessly by its long faded ribbons, and in the other that official envelope which had come to her from the President of the Confederacy. She called to her mother as she ran down.

"Mamma!" Her face was white and her voice was pitched high, fraught with excited intensity. "Under my window, in the rosebushes, at the back of the house! They're hurting somebody frightfully, I am sure!"

She burst into the room with the last word. Mrs. Varney stared at her, understanding fully who, in all probability, was being roughly dealt with in the rosebushes, and realising what a terrible effect such disclosures as she had listened to would produce upon the mind of the girl.

"Where Did You Come From, and What Are You?"

"Come," said Edith, turning rapidly toward the rear window; "we must stop it."

Mrs. Varney stood as if rooted to the floor.

"Well," said the girl, in great surprise, "if you aren't coming, I will go myself."

These words awakened her mother to action.

"Wait, Edith," she said.

Now, and for the first time, Edith noticed Mr. Arrelsford, who had stepped back and away from her mother. She replied to his salutation with a cold and distant bow. The man's face flushed; he turned away.

"But mamma, the men outside," persisted the girl.

"Wait, my dear," said her mother, taking her gently by the arm; "I must tell you something. It will be a great shock to you, I am afraid."

"What is it, mamma? Has father or—"

"No, no, not that," said Mrs. Varney. "A man we have trusted as a friend has shown himself a conspirator, a spy, a traitor."

"Who is it?" cried the girl, at the same time instinctively divining—how or why she could not tell, and that thought smote her afterward—to whom the reference was being made.

Mrs. Varney naturally hesitated to say the name. Arrelsford, carried away by his passion for the girl and his hatred for Thorne, was not so reticent. He stepped toward her.

"It is the gentleman, Miss Varney, whose attentions you have been pleased to accept in the place of mine," he burst out bitterly.

His manner and his meaning were unmistakable. The girl stared at him with a white, haughty face, in spite of her trembling lips. Mechanically she thrust the envelope with the commission into her belt, and confronted the man who loved her and whom she did not love, who accused of this hateful thing the man whom, in the twinkling of an eye, she realised she did love. Then the daughter turned to her mother.

"Is it Mr. Arrelsford who makes this accusation?" she asked.

"Yes," said Arrelsford, again answering for Mrs. Varney, "since you wish to know. From the first I have had my suspicions about this—"

But Edith did not wait for him to finish his sentence. She turned away from him with loathing, and moved rapidly toward the front window.

"Where are you going?" asked Arrelsford.

"For Captain Thorne."

"Not now," he said peremptorily.

The color flamed in the girl's cheek again.

"Mr. Arrelsford, you have said something to me about Captain Thorne. Are you afraid to say it to him?"

"Miss Varney," answered Arrelsford hotly, "if you—if you—"

"Edith," said Mrs. Varney, "Mr. Arrelsford has good reasons for not meeting Captain Thorne now."

"I should think he had," returned the girl swiftly; "for a man who made such a charge to his face would not live to make it again."

"My dear, my dear," said her mother, gently but firmly, "you don't understand, you don't—"

"Mamma," said the girl, "this man has left his desk in the war department so that he can have the pleasure of persecuting me."

Both the mother and the rejected suitor noticed her identification of herself with Captain Thorne in the pronoun "me," one with sinking heart and the other with suppressed fury.

"He has never attempted anything active in the service before," continued Edith, "and when I asked him to face the man he accuses, he turns like a coward!"

"Mrs. Varney, if she thinks—"

"I think nothing," said the girl furiously; "I know that Captain Thorne's character is above suspicion."

Arrelsford sneered.

"His character! Where did he come from—what is he?"

"For that matter," said Edith intensely, "where did you come from, and what are you?"

"That is not the question," was the abrupt reply.

"Neither," said the girl, "is it the question who he is. If it were, I'd answer it—I'd tell you that he is a soldier who has fought and been wounded in the service, while you—"

Arrelsford made a violent effort to control himself under this bitter jibing and goading, and to his credit succeeded in part.

"We are not so sure of that, Miss

"Why, he brought us letters from Stonewall Jackson himself."

"Has it occurred to you that General Jackson was dead before his letters were presented?" asked Arrelsford quickly.

"What does that signify if he wrote them before he was killed?"

"Nothing certainly," assented the other, "if he wrote them."

"The signatures and the letters were verified."

"They may have been written for some one else and this Thorne may have possessed himself of them by fraud, or—"

"Mr. Arrelsford," cried the girl, more and more angry, "if you mean—"

"My dear child," said Mrs. Varney, "you don't understand. They have proofs of a conspiracy. The Yankees are going to try to break through our lines tonight, some one is going to use the telegraph, and two men in the northern secret service have been sent here to do this work. One is in Libby prison. Our faithful Jonas has been corrupted. He went there today and took a message from one and brought it here to deliver to the other. They are trying to make him speak out there to tell who— Our country, our cause, is at stake."

"Is this Mr. Arrelsford's story?" asked the daughter stubbornly, apparently entirely unconvinced.

"No; these are facts. We had Jonas in here," answered her mother; "caught him off his guard, and found the incriminating paper on him."

"But he has not said it was for—" persisted Edith desperately.

"Not yet," whispered Mr. Arrelsford, "but he will. You may be sure of that; we have means to—Oh, Corporal," he broke off eagerly, looking toward the door where the corporal stood, his hand at salute. "Well, speak out, [illegible]"

"Nothing, sir."

"What have you done with him?"

"Strung him up three times, and—"

"Well, string him up again," snarled Arrelsford. "If he won't speak, shoot it out of him, kill the dog. We don't need his evidence anyway, there's enough without it."

"There is nothing," said Edith tersely.

"By midnight," answered Arrelsford, "you shall have all the proof—"

"There is no proof to have," persisted the girl.

"I will show it to you at the telegraph office, if you dare to go with me."

"Dare! I will go anywhere, even with you, for that—"

"I will call for you in half an hour, then," said Arrelsford, going toward the door.

"Wait," interrupted Edith; "what are you going to do?"

"I am going to let him get this paper," said Arrelsford, coming back to the table. "He will know what they want him to do, and then we'll see him try to do it."

"You are going to spy on him, are you?"

"I am going to prove what he is."

"Then prove it openly at once. It is shameful to let such a suspicion rest upon an honorable man. Let him come in here, and—"

"It is impossible."

"Then do something, something, but do it now!" cried the girl. "You will soon know that he is innocent, you must know it. Wait! You say the prisoner in Libby is his brother—that's what you said—his brother. Bring him here. Go to the prison and bring that man here."

"What?"

"Let them meet. Bring them face to face, then you can see whether—"

"You mean bring them together here?"

"Yes."

"As if the prisoner were trying to escape?"

"Exactly."

"There is something in that," said Arrelsford; "when do you suggest—"

"Now."

"I am willing to try it, but it depends upon you. Can you keep Thorne here?"

"I can."

"It won't take more than half an hour. Be out there on the veranda. When I tap on the glass bring him into this room and leave him alone. And I can rely upon you to give him no hint or sign that we suspect—"

"Mr. Arrelsford!" said the girl, indignant and haughty, and her mother stepped swiftly toward her, looking at him contemptuously, as if he should have known that such an action would be impossible for either of them.

Arrelsford gazed at them a minute or two, smiled triumphantly, and passed out of the room.

"Mamma, mamma!" moaned the girl, her eyes shut, her hand extended. "Mamma," she repeated in anguish.

"I am here, Edith dear; I am here," said Mrs. Varney, coming toward her and taking her tenderly in her arms.

"Do you think—do you think—that he—he could be what they say?" Her hand fell upon the commission in her belt. "This commission I got for him this afternoon—"

"Yes?"

"The commission, you know, from the President, for the telegraph service—why, he refused to take it," her voice rose and rang triumphantly through the room; "he refused to take it! That doesn't look as if he wanted to use the telegraph to betray us."

"Refused! That's impossible!" said her mother.

"He said that it was for me that he couldn't take it."

"For you! Then it is true," answered Mrs. Varney.

"No, no," said the girl; "don't say it."

"Yes," said her mother; "the infamous—" The girl tried to stifle with her hand upon her mother's lips the words, but Mrs. Varney shook off her hand. "The spy, the traitor," she added witheringly.

"No, no!" cried the girl, but as she spoke, conviction seemed to come to her. Why was it that her faith was not more substantially based and enduring? she asked herself. "Mamma," she wailed, "it can't be." She buried her face in her hands for a moment and then tore them away and confronted her mother boldly. "Won't you leave me alone for a little while, mamma?" she asked plaintively. "I must get—" mother, gently laying her hand on her daughter's bent head.

Left alone, the girl took the commission from her belt, opened it, smoothed it out, and read it through, as if bewildered and uncomprehending. She folded it up again, and walked slowly over to one of the front windows, drew aside the curtains, and pushed it open. All was still. She listened for she knew not what. There was a footstep from the far end of the walk leading from the summer-house, a footstep she knew. Edith moved rapidly away from the window to the table and stood by it, her hand resting upon it, her knees fairly trembling in her emotion, as she waited. The next moment the open space framed the figure of Captain Thorne. He entered fearlessly, but when his eye fell upon her there was something so strained about her attitude that a spark of suspicion was kindled in his soul. Yet his action was prompt enough. He came instantly toward her and took her hand.

"Miss Varney," he said.

Edith watched his approach fascinated, as a bird by a serpent. His touch awakened her to action. She snatched her hand away and shrank back.

"No; don't touch me!" she cried.

He looked at her in amazement. The spark of suspicion burst into flame, but she recovered herself instantly.

"Oh, it was you," she faltered. She forced a smile to her lips. "How perfectly absurd I am. I am sure I ought to be ashamed of myself. Come, let's go out on the veranda. I want to talk to you about so many things. There's—there's half an hour—yet before we must go to Caroline's."

She had possessed herself of his hand again as she spoke. She now stepped swiftly toward the window. [illegible] reached the opening. She stepped through it and archly looked back at him, still in the room.

"How lovely is the night," she said with tender persuasiveness. "Come with me."

The man looked around him hastily. Every moment was precious to him. Did Miss Varney know? If so, what did she know? What was to be gained or lost by half an hour's delay on his part? He drew out his watch and glanced at it swiftly. There was time. He would never see her again. He might say he would possibly never see anyone again after the hazards of this night. He was entitled to one brief moment of happiness. How long had she said? Half an hour. He would take it.

"Aren't you coming, Captain Thorne?" cried the girl from the porch, all the coquettish witchery of youth and the South in her voice.

"I am coming," answered the officer, deliberately stepping through the window, "for just half an hour," he added.

"That will be time enough," replied the girl, laughing.

CHAPTER VII.

Wilfred Writes a Letter.

Half an hour is a short or a long time, depending upon the individual mood or the exigencies of the moment. It was a short half hour to Captain Thorne—to continue to give him the name by which he was commonly known—out in the moonlight and the rose garden with Edith Varney. It was short to him because he loved her and because he realised that in that brief space must be packed experience enough to last him into the long future, it might be into the eternal future!

It was short to Edith Varney, in part at least for the same reason, but it was shorter to him than to her, for at the end of that period the guilt or innocence of the man she loved and who loved her would be established beyond peradventure; either he was the brave, devoted, self-sacrificing Confederate soldier she thought him, or he was a spy; and since he came of a Virginia family, although West Virginia had separated from the Old Dominion, she coupled the word spy with that of traitor. Either or both would be enough to condemn him. Fighting against suspicion, she would fain have postponed the moment of revelation, of decision, therefore too quickly passed the flying moments.

It was a short half hour to Thorne, because he might see her no more. It was a short half hour to Edith because she might see him no more, and it might be possible that she could not even allow herself to dream upon him in his absence in the future. The recollection of the woman would ever be sweet and sacred to the man, but it might be necessary for the woman to blot out utterly the remembrance of the man.

It was a short half hour to young Wilfred in his own room, waiting impatiently for old Martha to bring the altered uniform, over which Caroline was busily working in the large old-fashioned kitchen. She had chosen that odd haven of refuge because there she was the least likely to be interrupted and could pursue her task without fear of observation by any other eyes than those of old Martha. The household had been reduced to its smallest limit and the younger maids who were still retained in the establishment had been summarily dismissed to their quarters for the night by the old mammy.

Now that Wilfred had taken the pledge, his impatience to go was at fever heat. He could not wait, he felt, for another moment. He had spent some of his half hour in composing a letter with great care. It was a short letter and therefore was soon finished, and he was now pacing up and down his room with uneasy steps waiting for old Martha's welcoming voice.

It was a long half hour for little Caroline Mitford, busily sewing away in the kitchen. It seemed to her that she was taking forever to turn up the bottoms of the trouser legs and make a "hem" on each, as she expressed it. She was not very skillful at such rough needlework and her eyes were not so very clear as she plied at tailoring. This is no reflection upon their natural clarity and brightness, but they were quite often dimmed with tears, which once or twice brimmed over and dropped upon the coarse fabric of the garment upon

ON STEAMER TO-DAY.

The Stoney Lake Navigation Company's regular trip to-day, June 14th, has been cancelled.

Local Methodists in Orillia.

Six officials of the George street Methodist church, Messrs. Stabler, A. W. Creasman, D. W. Dumble, S. R. Arstrong, G. A. Ferguson and Benj. Shortley, motored to Orillia yesterday for the purpose of looking over two splendid school buildings in Orillia.

A Moonlight Excursion.

Last night the local teamsters held a very largely attended moonlight excursion down the river in the popular steamer Stoney Lake. All of the 150 present, had highest words of praise for the crew from Captain down, of the Stoney Lake.

Burn the Pests.

The farmers report that never were the caterpillars worse than now, and that the prospects for another year are something dreadful to contemplate. Summer spraying and pruning may help some orchards, but the best way to eradicate the pests is to burn them.

Improvements to Wescott St.

About a month ago the city started to repair Wescott street which every spring and after every heavy rain is about two feet below the water. Clay was placed on the road and now as a finishing touch towards making it one of the best roads in the city, the city's men are using gravel.

Local Draught Champion.

The final series for the championship of the P.D.C. has been decided. The final contestants being P. McArthur and A. Ridley. The first game resulted in a draw, but in the second game P. McArthur defeated his opponent. As those two had on occasions of the last series, played two draws and one win each. P. McArthur thus becomes champion.

Live Wire Real Estate Man.

Attention of our readers is respectfully drawn to the advertisement of Messrs. J. T. O'Connell & Co., the Hunter Street real estate experts. Messrs. O'Connell & Co. have some properties for sale well worth serious consideration by home seekers and others. The well-known reputation of this firm is a sufficient guarantee for those patronizing them.

He Wanted Notoriety.

A few weeks ago the barn of Mr. Sam Walker, of Lindsay, was burnt down and a few days later his store was set afire. The latter fire was discovered and extinguished by a call boy at the round house there. It now transpires, we are informed, that the call boy started the fire to get notoriety and see his name in the paper.

Water Commissioners Good Bargain.

The Peterborough Water Commissioners met yesterday and passed a resolution authorizing the payment to the Bishop Construction Company of the sum of $3,000 in full settlement of all claims. The acceptance of this amount by the company will result in the termination of the law suit between the Bishop Construction Company and the City of Peterborough, that has been in progress ever since the company went into liquidation some months ago.

A Local Pig Story.

Mr. Bell, of Smith, brought a pig weighing 630 pounds to the city yesterday. On his way to Matthews factory, he took it to be weighed on the market scales. On the scales the animal registered 630 pounds, but before it could be taken off it succumbed to the heat and toppled over. For an hour Mr. W. Fisher the market clerk, and Mr. Bell carried water to keep the pig from expiring on the scales. The big pig, however, later on recovered. A scoffer present declared that it was given an injection of Dr. Friedmann's turtle serum. This, however, was ascertained to be incorrect.

Quit Sniffing, Stop Sneezing Cure Your Cold Now!

Thousands of Cases Prove the Quickest Cure is Catarrhozone.

When germs attack the lining of the nose, make you sneeze and gag—when later on they infest the bronchial tubes—how can you follow them with a cough syrup?

You can't do it—that's all. Cough syrups go to the stomach—that's why they fail.

But Catarrhozone goes everywhere—gets right after the germs—kills them—heals the soreness—cures the inflammation—makes Catarrh disappear.

"Nothing I have ever used gives the warm, soothing sensation of Catarrhozone," writes Isabel Fry, of Seguin Falls, Ont. "I was in a frightful way with catarrh of the nose and throat—had droppings, hard breathing, bad breath and indigestion. Catarrhozone relieved at once and cured me thoroughly. It is invaluable in colds, sore throat and bronchial trouble." Not difficult for Catarrhozone to cure, because it contains the essences of pine balsams and other antiseptics that simply mean death to catarrh. Large size costs $1.00, and contains two months treatment; smaller size, 25c. and 50c. all druggists and storekeepers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Misuse of Telephone Service.

Yesterday a well known local gentleman called at this office and took exception to the manner in which some people use the telephone. He noted that he has twice in one day received unpleasant and unfounded information concerning himself for the custom House and also another message, regarding the same subject, from another party. He in company with newspapers, wishes it known that wrong information over a telephone constitutes a serious offence under the Criminal Code. Of course in such cases no blame is attached to the telephone company for making connections for indiscrete people.

To Be Tried for Horse Stealing.

Chas. Healy, a local horse dealer, will appear before Magistrate Dumble this morning on the charge of stealing a horse from Wm. Fife of Otonabee. It is alleged that last Wednesday Healy gave Fife a "good time" Later, he exchanged horses with the man. Immediately afterwards Healy started for the country. Fife realized how he had been duped when on the road home he saw the old plug he was driving. He laid an information charging Healy with the theft of his horse. Healy was arrested last night at Havelock by the Havelock constable.

News From Court Chemong.

A largely attended monthly meeting of Court Chemong, No. 530 was held last night, in the W.O.W. Hall, George street. Twelve new members were presented by Bro. A. DEATHS AND FUNERALS

Miss Phillips.

Miss Rhoda M. Phillips, of Cricket Place, passed away on Thursday evening, after a lengthy illness. The deceased was 24 years of age and was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Phillips.

Late Mr. Coughlin's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Godfrey Coughlin was held yesterday morning from his late home 99 Aylmer street to the Church of the Sacred Heart, and to St. Peter's cemetery for interment. The requiem was sung by Rev. M. J. O'Brien, D.D., while Father McCauley and Father Cote assisted in the choir, and also officiated at the grave.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

RACE OF PYGMIES INTEREST

In People Recently Discovered in Papua, Scientists See a Connection With the Stone Age.

In a race of pygmies recently discovered in Papua, scientists see another connecting link between the average savage races of today and primitive man of the stone age. Tapiro is the name given to this pygmy race. The men are extremely small but well molded, strong and active. In contrast to the Papuans, they have stocky, well-made calves instead of the thin, straight legs of their neighbors.

Unlike most savages, they do not practice tattooing or cicatrisation. Their needs for comfort are few. Each man may carry all his portable property in a sort of haversack, which is slung over his shoulder. This contains his sleeping mat, fire stick, rattan for kindling a flame, tobacco and other odds and ends.

They are remarkably skilful in hewing rough but absolutely balanced canoes from the heavy trunks of trees. The craft are beautifully carved and are propelled by paddles with long shafts and wide blades. Skilful as they are in the making of canoes, their only implements are stone axes and bone knives.

In disposing of their dead they wrap the body in mats and place it in a rude coffin usually constructed of broken canoes. The coffin is raised on a sort of trestle and left until decomposition is complete. The skulls of the dead are kept by their relatives and friends and in a short time become worn smooth from handling.

THE GOVERNMENT PLAN MARINE PLANT AT CHARLOTTETOWN

Will be Ready in Four Years to Build Small Cruisers and Other Types of War Vessels

Ottawa, June 14.—The Dominion Government is taking immediate steps to construct a marine yard on the Atlantic seaboard which in size and capacity will enable it to turn out smaller class cruisers and other types of war vessels, transports and all classes of steamers required in the Government service.

The new shipyard will be constructed and operated by the government, and it is to be at Charlottetown, P. E.I. It will be the first definite step to carry out Premier Borden's policy of building up a great ship building industry in Canada.

The whole question of shipbuilding in the Dominion is now receiving the most careful consideration of the government, and it is likely that a royal commission composed of experts will be appointed to enquire closely into everything associated with and pertaining to the matter.

It is hoped to have the yard completed and ready to receive construction orders in less than four years. Situated on the Atlantic seaboard, practically in the path of all vessels plying between Great Britain and the Dominion, in a splendid natural harbor and of easy access to the steel works of Nova Scotia, the new yard will undoubtedly prove a tremendous stimulous and aid to ship construction in the Dominion.

No Action Taken

Brandon, June 14.—During the session of the Manitoba Methodist Congress on Saturday, Rev. Dr. S. D. Chown, general superintendent, read a telegram from Premier Borden to the effect that the government had taken no steps so far in regard to the building of a Roman Catholic boarding school at Norway House. This announcement created an outburst of applause from the crowded assembly.

MEIGHEN MAY NOT TAKE PORTFOLIO, HE DEMANDS TERMS

Rumor Has it That He Will Decline Cabinet Appointment Unless Concessions are Made

Ottawa, June 14.—The Prime Minister has gone to Grand Pre and Halifax for a fortnight. He will be joined at Halifax by Hon. Frank Cochrane and Mr. F. P. Gutelius. Hon. W. T. White is soon to go west and with so many ministers away from the city it is not likely that any cabinet changes or other important appointments will be announced for some time. Nevertheless there is considerable gossip as to who will succeed Hon. W. J. Roche as Minister of the Interior.

It has been semi-officially announced that Dr. Roche will place his resignation in the hands of the Premier upon his return to Canada this month. It is well known that he has desired to be relieved of his onerous portfolio for some time, and a few weeks ago it seemed to be universally understood that his successor would be Mr. Arthur Meighen the brilliant young Conservative member for Portage La Prairie.

Of late, however, there are persistent rumors to the effect that Mr. R. B. Bennett of Calgary, will succeed Mr. Roche. Mr. Bennett, although a brilliant orator, is Mr. Meighen's junior in service, and has not taken so active a part in the business of the house. On the other hand it is pointed out that Manitoba at present has two cabinet ministers while Saskatchewan and Alberta are unrepresented, except by Senator Lougheed, who is a member of the cabinet without portfolio.

Wants Concessions.

Another rumor is to the effect that Mr. Meighen has declined to join the government unless concessions are made to the progressive spirit of the party. The Portage La Prairie member had, and still has, some pronounced views in respect to the Bank Act. He desired to speak on the second reading of Mr. White's bill, but yielding to party discipline, reserved his remarks for the banking and currency committee. He did not however find the atmosphere of that committee a congenial one, for the speech he desired to make and afterwards complained in the house of the persistent lobby which surrounded the committee. When the bank bill came back from the Senate with some amendments, which the finance minister accepted, Mr. Meighen and Mr. Bennett alike voted against the government.

LIBERAL SECTION SAY THAT WHITEWASH LAID TOO THICK

General Feeling That Majoity Report on Marconi Scandal Should Not Have Exonerated Accused

London, June 14.—The opinions on the report of the Marconi committee on the whole, follow party lines, but even in Liberal quarters the feeling is pretty general that the majority report should not have so completely exonerated the ministers involved.

The Nation, a leading Liberal weekly, says:

"The view of a section of the party is that Lord Murray should be repudiated, and Sir Rufus Isaacs should resign and that Mr. Lloyd George should express his regrets. As to the future, a good many Liberals consider that much depends on Mr. Lloyd George's speech in the forthcoming debate in the house. It is certain that the debate will have a powerful influence either for good or ill on the fortunes of the party."

Regret is expressed that the report of the Liberal chairman should have been thrown over by what was, in effect, a party vote, and all the more so, because many of the rank and file of Liberals consider Sir Albert Spicer's a good report and in accordance with the evidence, and think that the report which has been carried against him by Mr. Falconer, Mr. Booth, and the other Liberal members of the committee and their allies, has a too obviously whitewashing character.

Even as a matter of policy or strategy there are Liberals to be found who deem the attitude adopted by the chairman was far better for the Liberal party. It may be added that friends of the prime minister believe his views to be that it is his duty to carry out the operation of the parliament act in respect to the bills now before parliament and not to be deflected from that course by any personal issues.

There was a scene of much animation yesterday when the report and the minutes of the proceedings were issued from The Vote office, and members for some time studied and discussed the documents in the lobby.

RUNAWAY TEAM PUT CITIZENS TO FLIGHT

On Saturday afternoon the rail birds who usually roost on the tombstones at Moore's Marble Works, performed some surprising and hasty stunts. They climbed over monuments and stones without waiting to see whose memories said stones commemorated.

It seems that a C.P.R. engine whistled near the Charlotte street dump, two teams took fright and ran away. One team dashed up Water street, and as far as could be ascertained are still going yet. The other, a team used on the scraper, by the C.P.R. fled west on Charlotte street and jumped on the pavement at the Marble Works. Here the horses fell and were captured. The railbirds had to make quick time to avoid collision.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Warmer with light showers in some localities.

OPERATION KILLS ST. KITTS ALDERMAN

Melvin Moyer Injured Himself in a Fall and Gangrene Developed.

St. Catharines, June 14.—Alderman Melvin Moyer is dead at his home here, following a second operation performed in an effort to save his life. He injured himself in a fall a year ago and gangrene set in in one of his legs. He is survived by a widow, a son and daughter. He was 56 years of age and one of the best known insurance men in the country. Reeve D. H. Moyer of Clinton and F. H. Moyer, school trustee, of St. Catharines, are brothers.

FIGHTING FIREMAN HAD TO BE IRONED

Montreal, June 14.—Just as the ship was leaving the dock for England this morning, Thomas Heckey a fireman, made a break for shore. Special Officer Segar and Saptain Jenkins, the Wharf superintendent, chased the deserter and ran him down. Heckey put up a big battle with a crowbar before he surrendered. Even then he had to be put in irons to be taken to the police station. He was sentenced to five weeks in jail and deportation. Two other deserters got five days in jail. They blamed Canadian whiskey for their trouble

TRENT VALLEY CANAL GRANTS

In following up the votes in Parliament for money to be spent on the Trent Canal. This season we have been agreebly surprised at the amount granted. Some of the items are large, and will be a very great benefit to the future of the City of Peterborough. The first item in the estimates is $5,000 for repairing head water dams. Another item is $7,000 [illegible] repairs to dams, booms and slides on Gull River, Burnt River, Deer Bay and Nogie's Creek. Now, these two amounts are in the interest of the conservation of the water, irrigation, lumbermen, and power users who reap a great benefit from them. Another item is a grant of $30,000 for dredging; $13,000 of this amount is to be expended in West Peterborough, and still another grant is $50,000 for a new dam at Nassau, and also $27,000 for a new dam at Fenelon Falls, as well as a dry dock at Peterborough, $4,000 for a waiting-room on George street, Peterborough, $3,000 to repair the wharves on the Otonabee River, Rice Lake, Stoney Lake, and Sturgeon Lake. Repairs to Lift Locks at Peterborough and Kirkfield, machinery and banks, $6,000. Riprapping banks along the canal, $5,000.

The large amount of $1,000,000 granted is to finish the canal from Campbellford to Trenton, and $250,000 to begin the North end from Orillia to Georgeian Bay.

Anyone looking over the above items will certainly come to the conclusion that Mr. Burnham, the member for West Peterborough, has been working hard, and he certainly has much influence with the Government in order to get these splendid grants. Of course, all these grants are necessary, and our member, no doubt, impressed the facts on the Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals, who has the reputation of being exceedingly careful in the expenditure of public funds. When occasion arises he is large enough to grasp the situation, and vote the amount really necessary for the work to be done.

Certainly, West Peterborough is now reaping the benefit of having a real live representative in the Dominion House at Ottawa.

JAMES HILL DECLARES EVERY ONE ON WALL STREET IS CRAZY

Great Railroad President Sees no Cause For Getting Rattled Over the Money Situation

Ottawa, June 14.—James J. Hill gave an interview in which he discussed the money situation in an optimistic strain before leaving Ottawa. He attended the convention of the New York State Banking Association and his views were sought by many of the leading bankers attending.

Mr. Hill uttered a warning to anyone who sells short at the present. He admitted that money is hard to get, but said the market is going to work out all right. The crop will be a bountiful one, he said, and offset any complications there may be. He thought the situation in Washington is all right. He said:

"What is the matter with Wall street? anyway? Are they going crazy there? Everyone is as blue as indigo, and half the people do not know what they are blue about. All that people have to do in times like these is to keep a clear head and avoid getting rattled; then everything will come out all right.

"Take it from me, that the man who sells the United States short is going to suffer for it like the mischief. He will take his medicine and it will not be sweet, either. Why, those nervous fellow in Wall street who get worked up because money rates are going up, or because the stock market is going down, ought to realize that the United States will derive ten billion dollars' new wealth out of the ground this year, or a sum which exceeds the world's gold production for ten years. I want to say, too, that the Washington situation is all right. To hear some people talk, you would suppose that the administration was bent upon upsetting things. That is perfect foolishness."

THE VIKINGS.

FOUR ARRESTED FOR CHILD MURDER

Hired Man Who Had Sued for Wages Is Responsible for Prosecution.

Moose Jaw, June 14.—On her farm ten miles from Eyebrow, yesterday Mrs. Maud Greenman was arrested charged with the murder of her illegitimate child, which was born in March last. She was taken to Eyebrow, where an inquest was held on the remains of the child, which had been exhumed.

The jury found that the child had been frozen to death through being placed in a barn on Mrs. Greenman's farm. They endorsed her arrest for murder, and ordered the arrest of Mrs. Coldwell, nurse, and Mr. and Mrs. Foy, father and mother of the woman who gave birth to the child. They all appeared in court this morning, the two former on charges of murder, and Foys being accessories before the murder.

Pat Kelly, formerly a hired man on the Greenman farm, has openly boasted that Mrs. Greenman gave birth to a child and that he was the father. Kelly sued Mrs. Greenman for wages here last winter and got judgment, and then started suit against her for breach of promise of marriage. The case was considerably dampened by the fact that Kelly got three months for stealing coal. Last week he was committed for trial on a charge of shooting at Mrs. Greenman and is awaiting trial.

DR. MACDONALD, GLOBE, HAS FRACTURED SKULL

Winnipeg, June 14.—A despatch from Port Arthur says Dr. J. A. Macdonald, editor of The Toronto Globe, sustained a fractured skull as well as other injuries in the accident at Sault Ste Marie yesterday, and that he is now in the hospital on the steamer Detroit III, under the care of Dr. W. E. Hankel.

Beyond notification of his first injuries the relatives of Dr. Macdonald in Toronto have received no further word. They understand that he is continuing the trip under medical care, and expects particulars later.

CIRCUS DAY IS NEAR

Great Interest Centred in Barnum-Bailey Spectacle of "Cleopatra."

The Barnum and Bailey Greatest Show on Earth will be seen in Peterborough on Monday, June 23. Interest in the event is heightened because of its newly added spectacle of "Cleopatra" which opens the programme in the main tent. This dramatic treat alone is worthy of the great influx of strangers which usually attend this big show. The two performances to be given here will be exactly the same as those presented in Madison Square Garden where the season was opened in March.

The 4,000,000 people of the metropolis, have placed their O. K. stamp upon this wonderful institution. Every city in the world has shouted its praise. It stands as it always has at the head of the world's procession of amusement enterprises. It is more than fifty years old. From the first day of its existence it has taken the lead. No other show has got within sight of it. It now stands at the zenith of its glory.

It will arrive in Peterborough on the longest train ever hauled by the railroads. The new street parade will leave the grounds at 10 o'clock in the morning and follow the usual route. This parade cost its owners more than a million dollars. Nothing to approach it in magnificence was ever seen in America. The afternoon show will begin at 2 o'clock. The night show will begin at 8. The program will be given by 400 artists picked from the talent of Europe, Asia and America. There are 100 big novelties

EVANS A GALT MAN ROBBED AND THROWN INTO RIVER

Arrests Expected in Mysterious Murder Case Being Investigated by Police

Galt, June 14.—That Galt has a genuine murder mystery to solve would seem to be the rational conclusion, in view of facts that have come to light since the finding of a body in the Grand River Thursday by a young man named Evans, and the subsequent identification of the body as that of James Bruce, a well known farm laborer.

To the casual observer, the condition of the dead man when taken out of the water was suspicious. There were gaping wounds in the hand, and the features were smeared with blood. Of course, nothing authoritative as to the probable cause of the wounds, and whether they were sustained before the victim reached the water can be learned from the physicians who performed the autopsy, and whose duty it is first to communicate their finding to the coroner's jury. But it was discovered from credible sources that the report of the doctors will likely go towards bearing out the theory of foul play which the police and others fully acquainted with the facts of the case are disposed to entertain. To be quite plain, it looks very much as if James Bruce met his death at the hands of persons who were after the wad of money he was known to possess, and that the body was thrown into the river to conceal the crime.

Chief of Police Gorman is devoting his time to the case. It is known that Bruce went into a Galt clothing store on Saturday morning last and bought clothing apparel, displaying a roll of bills as he paid for his purchases. It is further understood that a certain trio of men, in whose company he was later, had more than passing interest in the stranger from the farm. These men the police are endeavoring to locate.

MILITANT SUFFRAGETTES GIVE EPSOM MARTYR REGAL FUNERAL

Burial of Emily Wilding Davison in London Occasion of Big Parade of Suffragettes

London, June 14.—The funeral of Miss Emily Wilding Davison, who met her death while interfering with the King's horse when it was running at full gallop in the Derby on June 4, took place here to-day.

A special train brought the body of the woman suffrage "martyr" from Epsom to Victoria station, where a procession composed of between 5000 and 6000 women was organized to escort it across the city through the principal streets to St. George's church, Bloomsbury, where the service was held.

Crowds gathered early in the morning in the vicinity of the militant suffragette headquarters, where the blinds were down and a huge banner hung at half mast. Many detachments of women arrived from the provinces to participate in the parade. Most of them were dressed in white and purple sashes and wore black bands around their arms while they carried bouquets and wreaths of white flowers.

Twenty Bands.

Shortly after midday twenty bands which were to furnish the music for the procession assembled at the Victoria station, where there were a great display of wreaths, bound with suffragette colors and banners to be borne in the procession. One of these bore the legend: "Fight on. God will give the victory," and another, "Unconquerable and not afraid."

The train bearing the coffin left Epsom station soon after 11 o'clock. The coffin was covered with a purple pall and was accompanied to London by Miss Davison's brother and a suffragette guard of honor, dressed in white and wearing black sashes.

BASEBALL

The Petes went down to defeat at Ottawa on Saturday, in the third and last game of the Ottawa series, after taking the first two from the Senators. It was an off day for the White Caps. The score stood at the finish 10 to 2 in favor of Ottawa.

At Brinton Park on Saturday afternoon, two very unevenly balanced gamed were pulled off. The first game was between the Machine Shop and the Brintons, with a score of 31 to 3 in five innings. In the last game the Typos put it over the Canoe Builders by a score of 25 to 6.

Something New

The well-known table beverage, POSTUM, now comes in

New Form

Called

Instant Postum

A delicious drink—absolutely free from the drug, caffeine, in tea and coffee.

A level teaspoonful of Instant Postum in an ordinary cup of hot water dissolves instantly and makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

Postum comes in two forms.
Regular (must be boiled)
Instant Postum doesn't require boiling but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water.

Made by Canadian Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Windsor, Ont.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 25c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 25c. Nugent's Sarsaprilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaprilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 386 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

PAUL'S BIG DEAL

Wins Fortune and a Bride Through Well Timed Speculation in Grain.

By GEORGE ELMER COBB.

"Get out and stay out!" yelled old Peter Griscom, irate and aggressive. "And never come back again!" he yelled additionally after his manager that had been, but was never to be again.

Paul Burton took it all quietly and without resentment. It was a rude dismissal, but he was used to the old fellow's furious ways.

"I am sorry, Mr Griscom," he said simply. "Certainly, however, I have not exceeded my instructions."

"Exceeded!" shouted Griscom. "Why, you've acted like an idiot. Here I leave you, on the first vacation of my life for two weeks. I come back to find that during my absence, for the first time in six years, wheat jumps up to 80. You knew that I had forty thousand bushels in the elevator, bought at 63. Think of it! Sixty-eight hundred dollars profit! And you sat by like a stoughton bottle, and let the golden chance of a lifetime go by. Here wheat has dropped to 65, and may go lower. Oh, I'd like to fight somebody!"

"You left no orders to sell, sir," reminded Paul.

"I won't talk about it. Get out. Stay out!" and old Griscom slammed the door of his office, and Paul Burton went his way.

"If it wasn't for Edna," said the young man to himself, "this would be almost amusing."

Yes, Edna was an element to consider. She had been away with her father on his vacation, and more than once Paul's heart had hungered for a sight of her bonny face. Now a flare-up had come. He was "fired"—ignominiously, and the girl he had secretly loved was a thousand miles away from him, so far as any hopes of winning her were concerned.

Paul Burton, grain clerk in a Chicago board of trade house, had come to Easton early in the spring, ordered by his physician to get employment where the air was pure and sylvan life a boon. He had just fitted in as bookkeeper for the small country elevator business of Peter Griscom. When the big price bulge came he was aware that the chance to make a small fortune was at hand, but he dared not act on his own initiative.

"I'd Like to Fight Somebody."

Paul hung around Easton the rest of the day, hoping for a sight of Edna. The next morning he went to another village. By the end of the week he had made a circuit of all the county towns, but had not found employment.

"The reserve cash is getting decidedly low," he said, as he went to his room at a little village hotel one night. "Well, I've got my old rugged health back, anyhow. I suppose it's the humdrum of the city again. After Easton! And after Edna! Ah, me!"

Thoughts of the ideal to whom he had never told his love kept Paul wakeful. He found he could not sleep, and got up and sat by the open window, watching the moon and continuing to think of the sweet, innocent face that it seemed he could never forget.

Suddenly his attention was called to a noisy tumult in the next room. Two persons had entered it. They seemed to be strangers on their way to the city after a long western trip. Paul could not help but hear what they said. As he did so his mind became intent.

"We'll wait till we get to the city before we write up our report?" asked one of them.

"Yes," came the definite reply. "There are so many notes and memoranda to look over, it will take time and a quiet place. I say, there will be some scrambling when the government issues the wheat crop bulletin."

"I should say so," came the answer. "Why, in the two states alone that I covered the wheat yield is twenty per cent. short."

"I have the data for three states," remarked the other. "It shows up, with blight and rust, nearer thirty per cent."

"Prices will go up."

"Yes, that is certain."

And then the two men went over a lot of details immensely interesting to the listener. Paul realized that unexpectedly there had been disclosed to him facts regarding the coming crop report that were of immense value. He was not an intentional eavesdropper, but he could not escape receiving the valuable information.

With daylight he was out on the streets. He took the first train for Marshall. He recalled a shrewd, sharp trader living there who seemed just the man to impress with the important knowledge he had acquired.

Before noon this man, John Lane, was in his confidence and a sort of provisional co-partnership was cemented. Mr Lane was to furnish the capital. Paul was to engineer the scheme. It was inevitable in their opinion that wheat would make a tremendous jump in the markets of the world when the shortage report was made public.

It now became the mission of Paul to buy up all the grain he could. A great many, discerning this, held on for good prices, and the quotation rose in the district.

One day Paul went to Easton. He boldly faced the lion in his den. In a business-like, matter-of-fact way he intruded on Mr. Griscom.

"I have come to buy your wheat," he announced, "if it is for sale."

"How much?" inquired the old man, ungraciously and suspiciously.

"Because you fancy my being 'a stoughton bottle' lost you a big profit," observed Paul. "I will offer you 80 cents."

"What!" shouted Griscom incredulously.

"I mean it," nodded Paul, planning to make the trade his own personally. "As it is, I advise you to hold on to your wheat. It will go still higher."

This old Griscom would not believe, but he was so delighted at his bargain that he actually invited Paul to dinner. That meant a sight of pretty Edna. When Paul left Easton that night he felt happy. He had regained old Griscom's good will and Edna had been more than friendly.

A happier man still, however, was Paul a month later. The government report came out, sending prices kiting. Paul and his partner were prepared to take advantage of the wildest grain market known for years. Dollar wheat electrified the farming world, and Burton & Lane sold at top notch price and made a fortune.

The papers were full of the successful coup of the enterprising partners. Dropping off the train at Easton one day, Paul met with a most gracious reception from old Griscom.

"Well," said the latter, "I wish I had held on to that wheat."

"You got a pretty good price for it, as it was," reminded Paul.

"That's so," agreed Griscom. "See here, Mr. Burton, I was rather hasty when I let you go. I suppose you are too well fixed now to think of coming back?"

Paul thought of Edna, and silently mused.

"As a partner, of course," explained Griscom.

"Well, Mr. Griscom," replied Paul slowly, "I was thinking of taking a partner—if I could get her."

"Her?" repeated Griscom, pricking up his ears.

"Yes, a young lady—a life partner. As a plain man asking a plain question, Mr. Griscom, can I have your permission to pay my addresses to Miss Edna?"

"That would bring us together in business, too," said old Griscom thoughtfully. "I certainly consider you a remarkably bright young man, Mr. Burton."

"I wonder if Edna thinks so, too," Paul questioned himself.

He asked her that same evening. The result was a double partnership—one of business, and the other of love.

CHANCES AT OTTAWA

Fire Alarm Installed in Parliament Buildings

Hereafter the House of Commons at Ottawa will have its own fire alarm. In all the years that are gone there has been no fire alarm. There have been little extinguishers stationed here and there, and at intervals the member traversing the corridors has come upon lengths of sinuous rubber hose coiled in snake-like piles.

The new alarm will ring in the lobby not far from the main entrance, and is connected with a dozen different points throughout the building, being also connected with the city fire department.

The old Commons chamber has also undergone a change. It is still the Green Chamber, but not so light a green. The ancient panels with the somewhat startling borders in black and gold were removed, and the walls tinted instead. Moreover, there has been some artistic padding done in the region of the ceiling to improve the acoustics.

A Salisbury Memorial

The Salisbury family have placed in the Salisbury Chapel of Hatfield Parish Church, a handsome memorial to the late marquis. It is a recumbent figure in bronze of the famous statesman in his robes as Chancellor of Oxford University, wearing the chain of the knighthood of the Garter, with the hands crossed over the breast and clasping a crucifix.

EDITORIAL NOTES

This is the season of the year when the woman's department of the average newspaper glows with advice to the June brides.

Special privileges to religious institutions are like cancers—the older the growth the deeper the roots, and the more difficult to remove.

We have always observed that in midsummer no scientist rushes into print with a statement to the effect that the sun's heat is giving out.

The Examiner says: "When you walk with the crowd you are almost sure to be headed in the wrong direction." Not on your life, if you want to go to the ball game.

A scientist declares that life may exist in the human tissues four years after death. This probably accounts for the fact that the Liberal party does not know that it is dead.

The Globe says that scientists are devoting themselves to the task of extracting the crow from a rooster's throat, when the problem that presses for solution is how to remove the shine from the seat of an otherwise good pair of trousers.

A lady who is fond of fishing told the Times yesterday that while enjoying this sport a few days ago at Stoney Lake, she caught a salmon trout weighing seven pounds, and when it was cut open to be cleaned a bass weighing three pounds was found inside. Great Scott! Not content with wearing slit skirts and seeking the ballot, the women are beginning to tell fish stories! Well, well! What next?

Mr. Roosevelt's appeal to the courts against the newspaper which called him a drunkard has been decided in his favor. Witnesses testified that the redoubtable colonel does not like whiskey, never drinks beer, never drinks in a barroom, never uses tobacco, and does not use profane langdage. This is not total abstinence, but it is very good as far as it goes and many of his admirers will be glad to know these things.

IF MEALS HIT BACK AND STOMACH SOURS

"Pape's Diapepsin" ends Indigestion, Gas, Dyspepsia and Stomach Misery in five minutes.

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of dizziness, heartburn, fullness, nausea, bad taste in mouth and stomach headache, you can get blessed relief in five minutes.

Ask your pharmacist to show you the formula, plainly printed on these fifty-cent cases of Pape's Diapepsin, then you will understand why dyspeptic troubles of all kinds must go, and why they relieve sour, out-of-order stomachs or indigestion in five minutes. "Pape's Diapepsin" is harmless; tastes like candy, though each dose will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all the food you eat; besides, it makes you go to the table with a healthy appetite; but, what will please you most, is that you will feel that your stomach and intestines are clean and fresh, and you will not need to resort to laxatives or liver pills for biliousness or constipation.

This city will have many "Pape's Diapepsin" cranks, as some people will call them, but you will be enthusiastic about this splendid stomach preparation, too, if you ever take it for indigestion, gases, heartburn, sourness, dydspepsia, or any stomach misery.

Get some now, this minute, and rid yourself of stomach trouble and indigestion in five minutes.

THE MILITANT MANIA

The suffragette who madly ran into a fatal accident on the Derby race course may deserve pity but only persons of her own undesirable temperament can think that she deserves praise. It is ridiculous to eulogize her as a martyr. She did not intend to sacrifice her life for anything. Her purpose was to scare the horses, stop the race, disappoint and irritate the many thousands of people for whom that was the great annual holiday, and then boast of her action and rejoice in her norotiety. But her senseless deed caused her death. And it is not at all creditable, although it is very pitiable.

Anarchy rules the minds of the militants. They are engaged in a campaign of destruction and intimidation, and have proved themselves enemies of law and order. They have proved something else—their unfitness to be voters. That is the damaging blow that they have struck at the cause which they profess to champion. Every true friend of women suffrage condemns and deplores the antics of these would-be terrorists. Their wanton and indiscriminate destruction of property is a craze that seems to mark them as irresponsible. Perhaps the most charitable thought of them is that they are not of sound or sober mind, but are the unfortunate victims of an infectious mania which they have not intelligence enough to resist.

WHEAT AND RECIPROCITY.

The Winnipeg Telegram says that at the present moment Manitoba wheat is 10 cents above Minneapolis wheat of the same grade in price. It has been shoRn so often in these columns that this is because we own better and cheaper transportation facilities, and therefore, have a better position as an intermediate market, that the reiteration becomes stale.

The only explanation of present prices would be that Minneapo,is had more wheat that it could use, or take care of. But then the surplus would immediately become export wheat and be in direct competition with our wheat in the ultimate European market.

Take it either way you like. Either there is a glut of wheat on the United States market, and, therefore, no market for Canadian wheat there, or Minneapolis cannot hold a candle to Winnipeg as a transfer market to the ultimate European consumer. In truth, there is an admixture of both conditions. There is assuredly no market for Canadian wheat for consumption in the United States. The country exports too much of its own wheat to permit of that. wnd with absolute equality at the European port of entry, there is a big adpantage in favor of Canada at the point of exit.

Now, what do the exponents of reciprocity think of that?

What do the farmers and the wheat growers of Western Canada think of it?

If they are ready to raise a bronze monument to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding, they are welcome to do so. If they still wish to shout "Hurrah for Reciprocity!" by all means let the welkin ring. But it will occur to many that that tinsel policy has been exposed by facts as much as it was opposed by patriotism.

It would not have mended our market, but marred it. It would have left our farmers at the mercy of foreign agencies of distribution on the Canadian farmers' own market, and left them without a cent's worth of benefit in the staples of their produce. It would also hape intimidated those engaged honestly and fairly in the further development of our transportation facilities, through which we even now can transport a bushel of wheat for a longer distance at a cheaper cost than any country in the world. It would have been a blow to Canada, and especially to the Canadian farmer, and that has been proved by events, as clearly as it was by logical demonstration.

PUBLIC OPINION.

The Times does not hold itself responsible for the opinions of its correspondents.

WASTE OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Sir,—Why, I actually saw one of those wagons the city has to draw water, going along Perry street, and the blooming thing was leaking—yes, leaking out of those things that stick out behind! If that is not a waste of good water. I think it is high time when the City Council should do something and see that it is stopped at once.

FORCIBLE FEEDING

Painful and Dangerous Operation at Best of Times

The following extract is taken from Sir Victor Horsley and Dr. Agnes Savill's report on forcible feeding, which appeared in The Lancet:—

The danger of forcible feeding is increased by the accidents liable to accompany the passage of tubes down the nose or throat. In several instances the œsophageal tube was passed into the larynx. Even in cases who did not offer resistance great pain and suffocation was caused by the clumsy use of the nasal tube when it coiled up in the back of the throat or came out of the mouth, and then had to be reinserted several times. The severe choking and vomiting which sometimes accompanied the passage of the tube led to danger from the entrance of food into the larynx.

The injection of food into the lung actually occurred in the case of one unresisting prisoner in whom the operation immediately caused severe choking, and vomiting was followed by persistent coughing. All night the patient could not sleep or lie down on account of great pain in the side of the chest. She was hurriedly released next day, so ill that the authorities discharging her obliged her to sign a statement that she left the prison at her own risk. On her arrival at home she was found to be very ill, suffering from pneumonia and pleurisy due to the food passed into the lung. Being fortunately a young and strong woman, she escaped with her life.

First Aid in Scrubbing

Make a stout platform 22x27 inches. Put a good steel revolving roller at each corner. Kneel on this platform when you want to wipe up the kitchen linoleum or to scrub the floor itself. The board is easily moved about by the motion of the hands.

That Musty Smell

When coming from a vacation the house often seems close and musty. Try throwing some apple peelings on the stove or gas range. Leave until they have shrivelled up. They will give out a delicious fragrance of apple which will go through all the open rooms.

SILK ROBES FOR MEN

How Lady Opera Singer Would Brighten a Dreary World

Fraulein Frieda Hempel, one of the most prominent singers in Germany, has started a campaign for the beautifying of the male sex. She wants all men to garb themselves handsomely, each according to his æsthetic whim and personal character; and she wants them in particular to wear historically consecrated costumes, brilliant colors and gems, and to curl their hair or wear it long. Silk and satin in rich colors, she says, would cost no more than the present ridiculous dress; and feathered hats are no dearer than stove-pipes, upon which Fraulein Hempel casts ridicule. She has drawn up a programme showing how men in the different professions should dress.

Doctors should be clean-shaven, and wear short-armed jackets; their clothes should be colored an agreeable rose; and their linen trousers should be laced crossways. Judges should wear red robes with square, silver patches. Their collars should be white and embroidered with gold frogs. They should wear masks of red velvet and carry sticks shaped like swords. Policemen should wear blue coats, white buckskin trousers, and red boots. Their horses should be picturesquely and splendidly saddled and bridled. If foot policemen they should wear sombreros, and in other respects be garbed like Roman lictors.

Fraulein Hempel says that she got these ideas from the fact that she is never attracted by men except when she sees them richly garbed on the stage.

WHEN BUYING MEAT

Some Points to Remember About the Healthy Article

When buying meat it is important to remember that the meat inspector is likely to have a rather lower standard than that set by the fastidious housewife. Also that animals may have been out of condition or actually diseased. In such cases the meat has a dark, dry appearance and is flabby; the fat has a reddish and oily look, and frequently a disagreeable fœtid odor.

Red meat should look bright, have a clear, cherry-red hue, be firm yet elastic, moist but not wet, and have a fresh not disagreeable odor. In well-fed cattle the muscles are slightly interspersed with fat, so that the meat has a marbled appearance. The fat, which may vary in color, from an almost pure white to a nice yellow, should be firm and dry, be slightly greasy to the touch, and have a fresh suety flavor. In well-fed, healthy cattle the kidneys, heart, etc., are covered with firm fat. In young cattle the fat is light in color; it darkens with age, and is also of a richer red in stall-fed cattle.

In white meat the flesh is firm and close knit, fresh looking but not wet. It is pale in color, not marbled (though certain cuts of pork may be streaked with fat), and the fat firm and white or light yellow.

Pigs are liable to pass on many serious disease germs, notably the germs of consumption. For these reasons pork should always be very thoroughly cooked.

WOMEN AS SPIES

They Are Useful in Obtaining Valuable Information

Not long ago an engineer in the English army was sentenced to four years' imprisonment for having betrayed naval secrets. Accidentally meeting a woman whom he had known casually years before, he was led to speak of his life in the service, and unwittingly to give her the clue to certain naval plans. These she is supposed to have sold to a foreign government.

About four years ago a case was recorded in Shoeburyness, where headquarters were opened, ostensibly for the study of languages. Under this pretext people came and went more or less constantly without attracting much attention. Meantime, a young German lady made periodical visits to Shoeburyness, where she formed the acquaintance of a young naval officer. He had not been more than a week or two in her company when he began to suspect her interest in his department. Afterwards it dedeveloped that she was employed by the Secret Service of Germany.

Princess Mary's Touch of Blue

As a rule Princess Mary has a touch of blue somewhere about her toilette. It may be only a tiny enamel brooch—for she is not yet permitted to wear jewels—it may be a blue ribbon, but it is there to repeat the color of her eyes. The Queen herself is a great lover of turquoise. The various gifts Queen Mary selected for her daughter while visiting the mills and potteries of Staffordshire are all blue.

Dress Hints

When cutting a pattern from goods that pull, such as crepe de chine, crepe charmeuse, mousseline, chiffon, baste the material to newspaper or tissue paper and cut out by pattern through paper and material.

If you have not wire collar supporters with covered ends, work buttonhole stitches over them with coarse cotton. This protection saves the lace of a collar and prevents the unsightly extension of wire over the edge.

Vests and Union Suits

The height of underwear comfort—scientifically fashioned so that no matter what position the wearer assumes the straps positively cannot slip from the shoulders.

Designed for summer wear, Cumfy-Cut Vests and Union Suits are made of Cotton, Lisle, Mercerized and Silk, in all sizes for ladies.

Knitted to fit the form, they will retain their shape, even after repeated laundering.

You'll Remember Me.

When other lips and other hearts
Their tales of love shall tell,
In language whose excess imparts
The power they feel so well;
There may perhaps, in such a scene
some recollections be
Of days that have as happy been,
And you'll remember me.

When coldness or deceit shall slight
The beauty now they praise,
And deem it but a faded light
Which beams within your eyes;
When hollow hearts shall wear a mask
'Twill break your own to see,
In such a moment I but ask
That you remember me.

AND THE LAND

The more inquiries one makes the more one is convinced that western farming offers great opportunities to the young woman, says a writer in the Toronto Globe. Not far from Edmonton a young lady took a quarter section—one hundred and sixty acres—and is making a remarkable annual income raising thoroughbred chickens. All of the section is in use, either for scientifically planned houses and large runways or for the raising of food for the fowls.

For anyone to whom this work appeals there is a great opportunity for specialization in different breeds. The preparation necessary for such an enterprise would probably include a short course at one of the agricultural colleges. The more funds at one's disposal the larger the start would be, and the greater the immediate returns.

Either the girl herself, or an assistant whom she would need if the work were done on a fairly large scale should be able to shoot, since several of the small prairie animals, which are otherwise objectionable, frequently play havoc in a chicken house.

Beautiful Hands

An excellent lotion for whitening and softening the hands is made of equal parts of pure olive oil and glycerine, beaten together and perfumed with oil of violets. Where glycerine is objected to, a paste made of 2 oz. of sweet almonds may be used instead of the lotion. Place the ingredients in a jar in a saucepan of boiling water, and let them melt together. Stir until well mixed and when cold pot the paste and apply it as often as necessary to the hands or smear it inside the sleeping gloves.

CENTRAL PARK
TRANSCONA

The best money maker of a money making industrial town. The G. T. P. Shops here have already cost $6,000,000.00 and other industries are rapidly making this town the industrial centre of Western Canada. Thousands of mechanics, tradesmen, clerks, and workmen of all kinds will be employed here as soon as all these industries start operations. Now is the time to invest before values go too high. Central Park offers the best investment in Transcona because:—

Central Park is in the centre of the incorporated Town; this means that Central Park will have all improvements as soon as any other part of the town.

Central Park has electric power right at hand.

The G.T.P. Main Line runs through the South end of Central Park, affording good trackage for manufacturers.

The Town is making arrangements to use the G. T. P. trunk sewer, Central Park is the only subdivided property through which this sewer passes.

Central Park prices are lower than any other Transcona property.

CENTRAL PARK IS ACROSS THE STREET FROM THE G. T. P. SHOPS AND STATION

$25 Will Secure a Lot

balance in 24 monthly payments. Your lot will more than double by the time you have it all paid for. Other terms can be arranged.

Central Park is located right in the path of Transcona's greatest development, across the street are the G. T. P. shops and station, the north side is bounded by the main road to Winnipeg; and the main road to St. Boniface on the south; while King Street, which runs the full length of the property on the East, is the only access to the station, and the only street from the north to the south of the shops. Make enquiries before you buy any Transcona property and you will find that Central Park offers the very best investment. Write to-day for folder showing location, plan and price list, don't let anything keep you from making this investment.

TURF.

The Canadian stallion, Major Brino 2:04¼ is being trained this season for a try at the 16-year-old pacing record, held by Johnston, 2:00¾.

The practice of "ringing in" horses is not wholly peculiar to America. The Victoria Trotting association of Victoria, N. S. W., recently ruled off for life four men caught doing that sort of work.

Cheeny, 2:07¼, the little mare from Texas, last week worked a nice mile in 2:10¼ for "Long John" Fleming at Indianapolis, and did the final quarter in 30¼ seconds.

Colusa, a Chamber of Commerce candidate, worked the Indianapolis track last Saturday in 2:09¼ for Havis James. Looks as if this one was just as good as last season when he negotiated miles around 2:06 in races on the Pacific Coast.

The Epsom Derby winner, Craganour, was sold last Saturday to the Argentine Republic for $150,000 and the horse will retire from racing and be used in the government breeding bureau.

Mineola, N.Y., June 14.—Herman Finkelstein who was arrested at Belmont Park on May 30, the day racing was resumed there, on a charge of accepting a $10 bet on a horse, has been charged by a justice of the peace. Finkelstein admitted the truth of the testimony of a detective who saw him receive money from Samuel Kornblum, but said the money was a debt Kronblum had owed him for a year.

CINDER PATH.

Greenboro, N. C., June 14.—A special dispatch from Hickory, N.C., says:

"Richard Little, amateur, native of this place and a Lenoir college graduate, yesterday broke the amateur and professional records for mile run on his privately constructed track. His time was 4 minutes 12 1-5 seconds. Taber of Brown, who recently ran with John Paul Jones, stayed with Little until the last quarter. Seven Harvard men witnessed the meet. Dr. Mandott of Harvard examined Little before the race and said the runner was at the height of perfection physically. After the race neighbor farmers placed Little on their shoulders and carried him two miles home."

BASEBALL.

New York, June 14.—Concerning College amateurs, Hal Sheridan says a terrible catastrophe is upon us. It happens every year, being more regular than the visit of the seven-year locusts, but in view of certain upheavals during the past year it brings a new string. With voice from the side lines urging that the secret be spilled, we refer to the closing of the regular college year and the turning loose throughout the country of several thousand student-baseball players who will be tempted sorely to risk fate and take upon the terrible blight of "professional-themselves—on the Q. T. of course—ism." Sport was certainly on the blink and seldom or never on the first pages when those immortal lines asking "What is so rare as a day in June," were penned, or the answer would have been obvious to a blind man. A real honest-to-goodness amateur is the answer. Such a personage is rarer than two days in June, or than 12 hours in June. Which settles that point, but doesn't settle the question of summer baseball playing by college men.

Some of the bush league and semi-professional clubs throughout the country are likely to make some shifts and take on new strength during the next few weeks, and though we would never suggest outright that the new bloods were fresh from the halls of learning, it isn't going to far to opine casually that although the names will not be similar, there will be some resemblances between some of these new semi-professional players and certain college baseball stars of whom we wot that would be startling to the erstwhile college chums of these players.

And this brings us to another turn in the road. Insofar as their standing in athletic circles is concerned, why shouldn't a college man play ball during the summer months with as much safety from being ruled out of college sport as would be accorded the college man who drives a truck during the summer.? It's a foolish question and you don-t have to answer

Chicago, June 14.—Catchers on the American league teams often get together when the club is on the road and fan about stolen bases, and there is a feeling among the receivers that very often the pitcher should be charged with the pilfered sacks. Every baseball fan is of the opinion that the catcher is to blame for the stolen bases. But the catchers have a kick coming on that score. They say they are not to blame in the majority of cases. The pitcher is equally as much to blame. The trouble seems to be that there are many twirlers who have not a good motion to first base and cannot hold men on the bags. This does not keep the runners nailed to the sack, and the result is that the runner gets a good start, and no matter how good the throw of the catcher may be he could not get his man. It happens very often during the season. The catchers sure have kick coming on this subject.

CONVICTS HAVE DAILY MUSIC

Head Of Lowa Pen Institutes Many Humane Reforms in Prison Life

Des Moines, Ia., June 13.—"I would not run a day without music," says James C. Sanders, warden of the Iowa Penitentiary at Fort Madison.

Sanders was the first to introduce music in a penitentiary in this country, and has attracted attention all over the United States because of his oew methods of handling convicts.

"Men, after all, are largely like animals," says the warden, "and they are crankiest when eating. Trouble in penitentiaries and asylumns of the country, you will find on careful investigation, always starts in the dining room or the kitchen.

No Trouble in Dining Room.

"Appreciating this fact, I applied the soothing affect of music by organizing an orchestra and having it play during the meal hour. We have had no trouble in the dining room since the music was introduced.

"Music appeals to the better side of men. I found the prisoners willing to learn to play musical instruments and to participate in the band and orchestra. We now have an orchestra of 12 pieces and a band of 17.

"We have instrumental music at our Sunday services. We've created an interest in vocal music too and the penitentiary has a fine choir of male voices."

Their Own Instruments.

Most of the instruments in the orchestra and band are owned by the prisoners themselves, having been purchased with money theo have saved from the meager pittance allowed them by the State for luxuries. They have been bought instead of tobacco fruit and sweets.

When Warden Sanders first took charge of the Iowa prison and issued his orders all authorities in the United States through up their hands in amazement.

He took the clubs away from the guards.

He abolished the lock step, and substituted the military step.

He introduced music.

Prisoners Pay for Course.

He organized a lecture course and brought talent from without to speak, all paid for by the prisoners themselves.

He abolished the stripes, except for the worst criminals.

He made the men polish their shoes and comb their hair, for he abolished the shaving of the head.

He introduced basketball and baseball.

He put men prisoners on their honor.

CLEVER FILM ACTOR

This Man Plays Parts on Screens all Over the Country

After all, there's no one quite so interesting and versatile as a character man in a stock company.

William West, for instance, who is one of the best known of the actors in the moving picture business plays almost as many parts as there are days in the year. Sometimes he is a dear old, dreamy musician whose outlook on life is through the windows of an artist's soul.

Sometimes he is a tramp, dirty, poverty-stricken, and grotesque; viewing all things from the standpoint of the hungry under dog.

Occasionally he is just an old man, benign, tottering, and content to live the life of one who has done his work and earned a rest.

William West as a Tramp and—

As Nature Made Him

He says makeup helps him to hide his own personality as well as his looks.

As he makes the face of the old man he is to play and dons the clothes of that particular, he gradually grows into the atmosphere of the part.

When the last touches have been put on his mobile face, the highlights in the character as he proposes to portray it are fixed in his mind.

The Largest County

Next to Yorkshire, Lincolnshire is the largest county in England; whilst Lancashire can claim a bigger population than any other county.

For a Sound Sleep

If you want to sleep peacefully, says a physician, and to avoid disturbing dreams, observe the following rules:

Keep the window open or otherwise thoroughly ventilate the room.

Secure as much freedom as possible from discordant noises.

Retire neither hungry nor too full

Do not use a pillow that strains the neck.

Have bedclothes as light as possible with sufficient warmth.

Avoid cold feet.

Do not bury the head under the blankets.

If these measures fail, take a warm footbath, and drink a glass of hot milk or water or a cup of weak tea when going to bed. "Hot water inside and outside often work a miracle in cases of this kind."

WASHING LACE

In Tepid Water With a Pinch of Soda

There are two ways to do everything; the right and the wrong. This applies to washing lace as to anything else.

Lace should be washed in tepid water which contains a very small pinch of soda. It should not be rubbed. Make a lather and dip the flimsy articles up and down in it.

It is a great mistake to iron lace. The wisest method in drying is to lay the collars or ruffles in a clean folded towel. When still a little damp pull the lace, make it into a small, tight roll and pin it. When it is completely dry unfold it. The lace will look almost like new.

British Women Teachers

The rulers of the world owe much to British nurses and governesses. They have been beside the Royal youngsters of almost every European country. The Czar walked bareheaded behind the coffin of the English nurse who tended him so carefully in his childhood. An English governess had charge of Queen Wilhelmina of Holland, an Irish lady was responsible for much of the earliest education of King Alfonso, the Kaiser is indebted to an English lady for his excellent English, the late King of the Belgians and the late King of Portugal had British governesses. Some of these ladies exercised an almost autocratic rule over their charges.

A French physician, who used to attend the Emperor and the Empress of the French at Biarritz, has related how his British nurse made the Prince Imperial eat spinach, "which he detested," in order to cool his blood. "But the child loved his nurse so devotedly that he always gave way to please her," he states.

"Tomboy" Makes Ideal Mother

The Crown Princess of Sweden, who is a daughter of the Duke of Connaught, is devoted to open-air amusements. She rides and cycles, swims and rows, plays golf, tennis and hockey; and can drive her own motor car.

But she was trained never to forget the first duties of a woman, and is skilled in the gentle pursuits of housewifery. She is able to give the most accomplished nurse or governess "tips" anent the nursery and schoolroom.

As Princess Margaret of Connaught her Royal Highness enjoyed the reputation of being the "tomboy" of the Royal Family, and when she first arrived at the somewhat stiff and formal Court of Sweden she was regarded as something of an enigma. The Princess has since those days found that the Swedes are kinder than their climate, and she is idolized by all sections of the community.

MILADY'S HAIR BRUSH

Not Only the Hair But the Brush Needs Good Care

Luxuriant, glossy hair is a great addition to one's good looks, so take great care of it. One way of keeping it in good health is to own a brush that fills your hair needs. Don't buy a brush just because the clerk wants you to. Examine its bristles thoroughly before you buy, remembering always that they must not be stiff and hard, but soft and moderately flexible, and that it will be an advantage to your hair if they are coarse and cut in different lengths. The size and shape of the brush is purely a question of taste, although one [illegible] care for a brush with a heavy back and handle, as then hair brush would cease to be a pleasure.

It is of the utmost importance that the hair-brush should be kept immaculately clean. This is a task that a great many women neglect, as, apparently, they never stop to think that the bristles can grow dusty and grimy and altogether unfit for use on the hair.

There can be no set time for giving your hair-brush a cleansing bath, as some days the hair is dustier than others and consequently the brush grows grimy rapidly. I think it will suffice to say that it should be washed whenever it shows the slightest sign of soil.

Always, before cleaning your brush, comb out any hairs that may have become wound around the bristles. After this task is completed, dampen the bristles, then pour on a quantity of liquid green soap and rub the bristles briskly with your finger tips, occasionally dipping the brush in hot water.

When you have done this for several minutes and the bristles seem to have shed the grime fairly well, take a stronge solution of washing soda, in very hot water and pour it into a large flat pan. See to it that the water comes not more than half way up the bristles of the brush, as otherwise the back and handle might be injured. When the bristles have been rubbed vigorously in this liquid for a minute, rinse them with lukewarm water and dry with a hot towel.

NOT A SUFFRAGETTE

Mrs. Borden Thinks Woman's Place Not in Political Life

Mrs. Borden, wife of Hon. R. L. Borden, was once asked: "Do you believe in woman suffrage?" "I do not," she replied. "To my mind, a wife is, or should be, a helpmeet, and the wife of a politician can, and ought to be, a help to her husband in a thousand ways, without actually entering the political arena herself. To have some knowledge of the public questions of the day, to understand the political issues with which her husband is concerned, make his interests hers intelligently and sympathetically, is not this possible without a vote? Not every one knows how exacting and how wearing is an active public life. Now if a wife understands her husband's capacity for work, studies his comfort and guards his health, is she not doing something as important as if she herself made speeches and voted?"

ALFRED THE GREAT A COMMON ANCESTOR

Strange Compilation of Facts Which go to Show How Many and How Few Were Our Forefathers

By a thousand strains the ancestry of each of us leads back to Alfred the Great, declares David Starr Jordan, President of Leland Stanford University of California.

Over and over again in any line of ancestry strains of blood have crossed and the same person, and therefore, the whole of a person's ancestry, would be found in different places in the individual pedigree. This happens dozens of times in all family histories.

That something of this sort must occur is evident from the fact that the child of to-day must have had at the time of Alfred the Great an ancestry of 870,672,000,000 persons. In the time of William the Conqueror (30 generations) this number reaches 8,596,964,592. This is shown by ordinary process of computation, two parents, four grandparents, eight great-grandparents and so on.

DAVID STARR JORDAN

As the aggregate of Englishmen in Alfred's time, or even in William's, was but a very small fraction of these numbers, most of these ancestors must have been repeated many times in the calculation. Each person who leaves descendants is a link in the great chain of life, or rather in life's network.

It is certain that the blood of each person in Alfred's time who left capable descendants is represented in every family in England of strict English descent. In other words, almost every Englishman is descended from Alfred the Great, as, very likely, also, from the peasant woman whose pan cakes Alfred is reputed to have allowed to burn.

Moreover, there are few, if any, who do not share the blood of William the Conqueror and most ancestral lines, if they could be traced, would go back to him by a hundred different strains.

Secret Service

Being the happenings of a night in Richmond in the spring of '65

The Play by William Gillette

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Mrs. Varney, wife of a Confederate general, has lost one son and has another dying from wounds. She reluctantly gives her consent for Wilfred, the youngest, to join the army if his father consents. The federals are making their last assault in an effort to capture Richmond.

CHAPTER II—Edith Varney secures from President Davis a commission for Capt. Thorne, who is just recovering from wounds, as chief of the telegraph at Richmond.

CHAPTER III—Capt. Thorne tells Edith he has been ordered away. She declares he must not go and tells him of the commission from the president. He is strangely agitated and declares he cannot accept.

CHAPTER IV—Thorne decides to escape while Edith leaves the room to get the commission, but is prevented by the arrival of Caroline Mitford, Wilfred's sweetheart.

CHAPTER V—Mr. Arrelsford of the Confederate secret service, a rejected suitor of Edith's, detects Jonas, Mrs. Varney's butler, carrying a note from a prisoner in Libby prison. Arrelsford suspects it is intended for Thorne. The note reads: "Attack tonight. Plan 3. Use Telegraph."

CHAPTER VI—Edith is indignant when Arrelsford tells her of his suspicions regarding Thorne. He declares the latter is Lewis Dumont of the Federal secret service and that his brother Henry is a prisoner in Libby. Edith refuses to believe and suggests that Thorne be confronted with the prisoner as a test.

which she worked. She had known the man who had worn them last, he had been a friend of hers, and she knew the boy who was going to wear them next. If she could translate the emotions of her girlish heart, the new wearer was more than a friend. Was the same fate awaiting the latter that the former had met?

The half hour was very long to Jonas, the old butler, trembling with fright, suffering from his rough usage and terror-stricken with anticipation of the further punishment that awaited him.

The half hour was longest of all to Mrs. Varney. After her visit to Howard, who had enjoyed one of his lucid moments and who seemed to be a little better, she had come down to the drawing-room, at Mr. Arrelsford's suggestion, to see that no one from the house who might have observed, or divined, or learned, in any way what was going on within should go out into the garden and disturb the young couple, or give an alarm to the man who was the object of so much interest and suspicion, so much love and hatred.

About the only people who took no note of the time were the busy sempstresses in the room across the hall, and the first sign of life came from that room. Miss Kittridge, who appeared to have been constituted the messenger of the workers, came out of the room, went down the hall to the back of the house, and presently entered the drawing-room by the far door.

"Well," she began, seeing Mrs. Varney, "we have just sent off another batch of bandages."

"Did the same man come for them?" asked the mistress of the house.

"No, they sent another one."

"Did you have much?"

"Yes, quite a lot. We have all been at the bandages, they say that that is what they need most. So long as we have any linen left we will work at it." She turned to go away, but something in the elder woman's face and manner awakened a slight suspicion in her mind. She stopped, turned and came back. "You look troubled, Mrs. Varney," she began. "Do you want anything?"

"No, nothing, thank you."

"Is there anything I can do or anything any of us can do?"

"Not a thing, my dear," answered Mrs. Varney, trying to smile and failing dismally.

"Is it Howard?" persisted the other, anxious to be of service.

"He seems to be a little better," returned the woman.

"I am glad to hear it, and if there is anything any of us could do for you, you would certainly tell me."

The elder woman nodded and Miss Kittridge turned decisively away and stepped briskly toward the door. On second thought, there was something she could do, reflected Mrs. Varney, and so she rose, stepped to the door in turn, and called her back.

"Perhaps it would be just as well," she said, "if any of the ladies want to go to let them out the other way. You can open the door into the back hall. We're expecting some one here on important business, you know, and we—"

"I understand," said Miss Kittridge.

"And you will see to this?"

"Certainly; trust me."

"Thank you."

Mrs. Varney turned with a little sigh of relief and went back to her place by the table, where her work basket sat near to hand. No woman in Richmond was without a work basket with work in it for any length of time during those days. The needle was second only to the bayonet in the support of the dying Confederacy! She glanced at it, but, sure evidence of the tremendous strain under which she labored, she made no motion to take it up. Instead, after a moment of reflection, she crossed to the wall and pulled the bell rope. In a short time, considering her bulk and unwieldiness, old Martha appeared at the far door.

"Did you ring, ma'am?" she asked.

"Yes," was the answer. "Has Miss Caroline gone yet?"

"No ma'am," answered Martha, smilingly displaying a glorious set of white teeth. "She's been out in de kitchen fo' a w'ile."

"In the kitchen?"

"Yas'm. Ah took her out dere. She didn't want to be seed by no one."

"And what is she doing there?"

"She's been mostly sewin' an' behabin' mighty strange about sumfin a great deal ob de time. She's a-sniffin' an' a-wepin', but Ah belieb she's gittin' ready to gwine home now."

"Very well," said Mrs. Varney, "will you please ask her to come in here a moment before she goes."

"Yas'm, 'deed Ah will," said old Martha, turning and going out of the door through which, presently, Caroline herself appeared.

She looked very demure and the air of innocence, partly natural but largely assumed, well became her although it did not deceive Mrs. Varney for a moment, or would not have deceived her if she had had any special interest in Caroline's actions or emotions. The greater strain under which she labored made the girl of small moment; she would simply use her, that was all.

"Caroline, dear," she began immediately, "are you in a great hurry to go home?"

"No, ma'am, not particularly, especially if I can do anything for you here," answered the girl readily, somewhat surprised.

"It happens that you can," said Mrs. Varney; "if you can stay here a few minutes while I go upstairs to Howard it will be a great help to me."

"You want me just to wait here, is that it?" asked the girl, somewhat mystified.

Why on earth anybody should be required to wait in a vacant room was something which Caroline could not understand, but Mrs. Varney's next words sought to explain it.

"I don't want you merely to wait here but—well, in fact, I don't want anybody to go out on the veranda, or into the garden, from the front of the house, under any circumstances."

Caroline's eyes opened in great amazement. She did not in the least understand what it was all about until Mrs. Varney explained further.

"You see Edith's there with—"

"Oh, yes," laughed the girl, at last, as she thought, comprehending, "you want them to be left alone. I know how that is, whenever I am—when some—that is of course I will see to it," she ended rather lamely and in great confusion.

"Just a few minutes, dear," said Mrs. Varney, smiling faintly at the girl's blushing cheeks and not thinking it worth while to correct the misapprehension, "I won't be long." She stepped across the room, but turned in the doorway for her final injunction, "Do be careful, won't you?"

"Careful!" said Caroline to herself, "I should think I would be careful. As if I didn't know enough for that. I can guess what is going on out ther in the moonlight. I wouldn't have them disturbed for the world. Why, if I were out there with—with—Wil—with anybody, I wouldn't—"

She stopped in great dismay at her own admissions and stood staring toward the front windows, over which Mrs. Varney had most carefully drawn the heavy hangings.

Presently her curiosity got the better of her sense of propriety. She went to the nearest window, pulled the curtains apart a little, and peered eagerly out. She saw nothing, nothing but the trees in the moonlight, that is; Edith and Captain Thorne were not within view nor were they within earshot. She turned to the other window. Now that she had made the plunge, she determined to see what was going on if she could. She drew the couch up before the window and knelt down upon it, and parting the curtains, looked out, but with the same results as before. In this questionable position she was unfortunately caught by Wilfred Varney.

He was dressed in the gray jacket and the trousers which she had repaired. She had not made a skilful job of her tailoring but it would serve. The whole suit was worn, ill-fitting, and soiled; but it was whole. That was more than could be said of ninety-nine per cent. of the uniforms commonly seen round about Richmond. Measured by these, Wilfred was sumptuously, even luxuriously, dressed, and the pride expressed in his port and bearing was as complete as it was naive. He walked softly up the long room, intending to surprise the girl, but boy-like, he stumbled over a stool on his way forward, and the young lady turned about quickly and confronted him with an exclamation. Wilfred came close to her and spoke in a low, fierce whisper.

"Mother isn't anywhere about, is she?"

"No," said Caroline in the same tone, "she's just gone upstairs to see Howard, but she is coming back in a few minutes, she said."

"Well," returned Wilfred, throwing his chest out impressively, "I am not running away from her, but if she saw me with these on she might feel funny."

"I don't think," returned Caroline quickly, "that she would feel very funny."

"Well, you know what I mean," said Wilfred, flushing a little. "You know how it is with a fellow's mother."

Caroline nodded gravely.

"Yes, I have learned how it is with mothers," she said, thinking of the mothers she had known since the war began, young though she was.

"Other people don't care," said Wilfred, "but mothers are different."

"Some other people don't care," answered Caroline softly, fighting hard to keep back a rush of tears.

In spite of herself her eyes would focus themselves upon that little round blood-stained hole in the left breast of the jacket. She had not realized before how straight that bullet had gone to the heart of the other wearer. There was something terribly ominous about it. But Wilfred blundered blindly on, unconscious of this emotion or of its cause. He drew from the pocket in his blouse a paper. He sat down at the table, beckoning Caroline as he did so. The girl came closer and looked over his shoulder as he unfolded the paper.

"I have written that letter," he said, "to the general, my father, that is. Here it is. I have got to send it to him in some way. It is all written but the last words and I am not sure about them. I'm not going to say 'your loving son' or anything of that kind. This is a man's letter, a soldier's letter. I love him, of course, but this is not the time or the place to put that sort of a thing in. I have been telling him—" He happened to glance up as he spoke and discovered to his great surprise that Caroline had turned away from him and was no longer looking at him. "Why, what's the matter?" he exclaimed.

"Nothing, nothing," answered the girl, forcing herself to face him once more.

"I thought you wanted to help me," he continued.

"Oh, yes! I do, I do."

"Well, you can't help me way off there," said Wilfred. "Come closer."

He spoke like a soldier already, thought the girl, but she meekly, for her, obeyed the imperious command. He stared at her, as yet unconscious but strangely agitated nevertheless. The silence was soon insupportable, and Caroline herself broke it.

"The—the—" she pointed at the trousers, "are they how you wanted them?"

"Fine," replied Wilfred; "they are just perfect. There isn't a girl in Richmond who could have done them better. Now about the letter. I want your advice on it; what do you think?"

"Tell me what you said."

"You want to hear it?" asked Wilfred.

"I've got to, haven't I? How could I help you if I didn't know what it was all about?"

"You're a pretty good girl, Caroline. You will help me, won't you?"

Her hand rested on the table as she bent over him, and he laid his own hand upon it and squeezed it warmly, too warmly thought Caroline, as she slowly drew it away and was sorry she did it the moment she had done so.

"Yes, I will help you," she said. "But about the letter? You will have to hurry. I am sure your mother will be here in a short time."

"Well, that letter is mighty important, you know. Everything depends upon it, much more than on mother's letter, I am sure."

"I should think so," said the girl.

She drew a chair up to the table and sat down by the side of the boy.

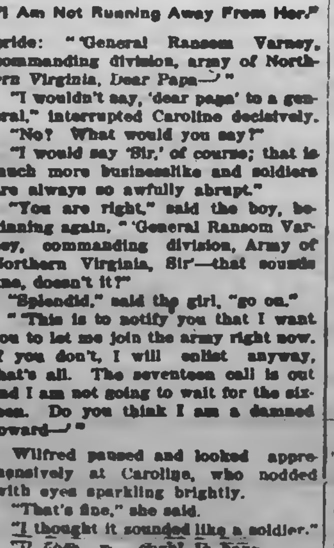
"I am just going to give it to him strong," said Wilfred.

"That's the way to give it to him," said Caroline. "He's a soldier and he's accustomed to such things."

"You can't fool much with father. He means business," said Wilfred; "but he will find that I mean business, too."

"That's right," assented Caroline sapiently, "everybody has got to mean business now. What did you say to him?"

"I said this," answered the youngster, reading slowly and with great pride: "'General Ransom Varney, commanding division, army of Northern Virginia, Dear Papa—'"



"I Am Not Running Away From Her."

"I wouldn't say, 'dear papa' to a general," interrupted Caroline decisively.

"No? What would you say?"

"I would say 'Sir,' of course; that is much more businesslike and soldiers are always so awfully abrupt."

"You are right," said the boy, beginning again, "'General Ransom Varney, commanding division, Army of Northern Virginia, Sir'—that sounds fine, doesn't it?"

"Splendid," said the girl, "go on."

"'This is to notify you that I want you to let me join the army right now. If you don't, I will enlist anyway, that's all. The seventeen call is out and I am not going to wait for the sixteen. Do you think I am a damned coward—'"

Wilfred paused and looked apprehensively at Caroline, who nodded with eyes sparkling brightly.

"That's fine," she said.

"I thought it sounded like a soldier." "It does, you ought to have heard the Third Virginia swear—"

"Oh," said Wilfred, who did not quite relish that experience; but he went on after a little pause, "'Tom Kittridge has gone; he was killed yesterday at Cold Harbor. Billie Fisher has gone and so has Cousin Stephen. He is not sixteen, he lied about his age, but I don't want to do that unless you make me. I will, though, if you do. Answer this right now or not at all.'"

"I think that is the finest letter I have ever heard," said Caroline proudly, as Wilfred stopped, laid the paper down, and stared at her.

"Do you really think so?"

"It is the best letter I—"

"I am glad you are pleased with it. Now the next thing is how to end it."

"Why, just end it."

"But how?"

"Sign your name, of course."

"Nothing else?"

"What else is there?"

"Just Wilfred?"

"No, Wilfred Varney."

"That's the thing." He took up a pen from the table and scrawled his name at the bottom of this interesting and historical document. "And you think the rest of it will do?"

"I should think it would," she assented heartily. "I wish your father had it now."

"So do I," said Wilfred. "Maybe it will take two or three days to get it to him and I just can't wait that long."

Caroline rose to her feet suddenly under the stimulus of a bright idea that came into her mind.

"I'll tell you what we can do."

"What?"

"We can telegraph him," she exclaimed.

"Good idea," cried Wilfred, more and more impressed with Caroline's wonderful resourcefulness, but a disquieting thought immediately struck him. "Where am I going to get the money?" he asked dubiously.

"It won't take very much."

"It won't? Do you know what they are charging now? Over seven dollars a word only to Petersburg."

"Well, let them charge it," said Caroline calmly, "we can cut it down to only a few words and the address won't cost anything."

"Won't it?"

"No, they never charge for that," continued the girl. "That's a heap of money saved, and then we can use what we save on the address for the rest."

Wilfred stared at her as if this problem in economics was not quite clear to his youthful brain, but she gave him no time to question her ingenious calculations.

"What comes after the address?" she asked in her most businesslike manner.

"'Sir.'"

"Leave that out."

Wilfred swept his pen through it.

"He knows it already," said Caroline. "What's next?"

"'This is to notify you that I want you to let me come right now.'"

"We could leave out that last 'to,'" said Caroline.

Wilfred checked it off, and then read, "'I want you—let me come right now.' That doesn't sound right, and anyway it is such a little word."

"Yes, but it costs seven dollars just the same as a big word," observed Caroline.

"But it doesn't sound right without it," argued the boy; "we have got to leave it in. What comes after that?"

Caroline in turn took up the note and read:

"'If you don't, I'll come anyhow, that's all.'"

"You might leave out 'that's all,'" said Wilfred.

"No, don't leave that out. It's very important. It doesn't seem to be so important, but it is. It shows—well—it shows that that's all there is about it. That one thing might convince him."

"Yes, but we've got to leave out something."

"Not that, though. Perhaps there is something else. 'The seventeen call is out'—that's got to stay."

"Yes," said Wilfred.

"'The sixteen comes next.' That's just got to stay."

"Of course. Now, what follows?"

"'I'm not going to wait for it,'" read Caroline.

"We can't cut that out," said Wilfred; "we don't seem to be making much progress, do we?"

"Well, we will find something in a moment. 'Do you think I am'—" she hesitated a moment, "'a damned coward,'" she read with a delicious thrill at her rash, vicarious wickedness.

Wilfred regarded her dubiously. He felt as an author does when he sees his pet periods marked out by the blue pencil of the ruthless editor.

"You might leave that out," he began, cutting valiantly at his most cherished and admired phrase.

"No," protested Caroline vehemently, "certainly not! That is the best thing in the whole letter."

"That 'damn' is going to cost us seven dollars, you know."

"It is worth it," said Caroline, "it is the best thing you have written. Your father is a general in the army, he'll understand that kind of language. What's next? I know there's something now."

"'Tom Kittridge has gone. He was killed yesterday at Cold Harbor.'"

"Leave out that about"—she caught her breath, and her eyes fixed themselves once more on that little round hole in the breast of his jacket—"about his being killed."

"But he was killed and so was Johnny Sheldon—I have his uniform, you know."

"I know he was, but you don't have to tell your father," said Caroline, choking up, "you don't have to telegraph him the news, do you?"

"No, of course not, but—"

"That's all there is to the letter except the end."

"Why, that leaves it just the same except the part about—"

"Yes," said Caroline in despair, "and after all the work we have done."

"Let's try it again," said Wilfred.

"No," said Caroline, "there is no use. Everything else has got to stay."

"Well, then we can't telegraph it. It would cost hundreds of dollars."

"Yes, we can telegraph it," said Caroline determinedly, "you give it to me. I'll get it sent."

"But how are you going to send it?" asked Wilfred, extending the letter.

"Never you mind," answered the girl.

"See here!" the boy cried. "I am not going to have you spend your money, and—"

"There's no danger of that. I haven't any to spend." She took the letter from his hand. "I reckon Douglass Foray'll send it for me. He's in the telegraph office and he'll do most anything for me."

"No," said Wilfred sternly.

"What's the reason he won't?" asked the girl.

"Because he won't."

"What do you care so long as he sends it?"

"Well, I do care and that's enough. I'm not going to have you making eyes at Dug Foray on my account."

"Oh, well," said the girl, blushing. "Of course if you feel that way about it, I—"

"That's the way I feel all right. But you won't give up the idea of helping me, will you, because I—feel like that?"

"No," answered Caroline softly, "I'll help you all I can—about that letter, do you mean?"

"Yes, about that letter and about other things, too."

"Give it to me," said the girl, "I will go over it again."

EXPERIENCE WITH
Sanol's Remedies

THE SANOL MFG. CO.,
WINNIPEG.
Jan. 22, 1912.

Dear Sirs.—

In regard to the sale of SANOL & SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, might say I have been handling the goods for about three months. I was obliged to put in SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES to supply one of my customers, who is now completely cured, and whom, I believe, has sent a testimonial to your office. Another customer ordered SANOL and I was obliged to stock it. This gentleman was so well satisfied that he has sent bottles to his friends. Up to this time I had never really taken much interest in the preparations but when customer after customer would come in and tell me about what SANOL had done for them, I came to the conclusion it would be worth my while getting behind SANOL and recommending it to my customers. This I have done and I have heard nothing but words of praise for SANOL and SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, I am.

Yours truly,
F. J. H. HAMLYN.

No More Asthma A Curre Discovered That Really Does Cure

Thousands Testify to the Lasting Benefit Derived by This Marvelous Preparation.

The country is simply wild over the wonderful cures of chronic asthma that are being made every day by Catarrhozone. It is a scientific surprise, a perfect marvel the way it brings old chronics back to health. You will say so yourself after you have used it once, say so after the very first time. Ever since people first began to have asthma, Catarrhozone is certainly the best remedy discovered.

Creighton E. Thompson, well known in Calgary writes: "Nothing too strong can be said for Catarrhozone. I suffered four years from asthma in a way that would beggar description. I went through everything that man could suffer. I was told of Catarrhozone by a clerk in Findlay's drug store and purchased a dollar package. It was worth hundreds to me in a week, and I place a priceless value on the benefit I have since derived. I strongly urge every sufferer to use Catarrhozone for Asthma, Bronchitis and Catarrh.

The one-dollar package last two months; small size, 50c; sample size 25c; all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Gained in Weight, Digestion Restored, Health Renewed

Here is More Proof of Quick Cure For All Folks That are Weak, Ailing, Nervous.

More Praise for Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

For a period last summer the thought of food excited feelings of nausea," writes Mrs. C. A. Dodre, of Bloomsbury. "The heat had made me listless and the distaste for food reduced me to condition of semi-starvation and brought me to the verge of nervous collapse. Tonics were useless to restore an active desire for food. The doctors told me my liver and kidneys were both at fault, but the medicines they gave me were too severe and reduced my strength so that I had to abandon them. At the suggestion of a friend who had been cured of blood and skin trouble, I began the use of Dr. Hamilton's Pills. The difference I first noticed was, that while they cleansed the system, instead of feeling weaker I felt better after taking them. Indeed their activity was so mild it was easy to forget I had taken them at all; they seemed to go right to the liver, and in a very brief time not only did all source of nausea disappear, but I began to crave food and I digested it reasonably well. Then I began to put on weight until within three months I was brought to a condition of good health. I urge Dr. Hamilton's Pills for all who are in poor health."

Get this best of all medicines today and refuse a substitute for Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. Sold by all druggists and storekeepers, 25c. per box or five for [illegible] The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Nine teams and as many men have been taken on the strength of the construction forces, who have in hand the reclamation of lands of the C.P.R. near the Sharlotte street dump.

When the prophet of old remarked "I said, in my heart, that all men are liars," he must have had a prophetic eye on Peterborough fishermen during the first week of the open season.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

ASKS $78,000 FOR ALIMONY

Wife of George G. Heye, Oil Man, Wants $6500 a Month and $10,000 for Counsel.

New York, June 14. — Alimony amounting to $78,000 a year is asked for by Mrs. Blanche A. E. Heye in her divorce suit against George G. Heye, oil man, broker and archeologist, filed in the supreme court in Brooklyn today. The Heyes were married in Wellesley, Mass., in 1904.

It became public about two months ago that there were marital troubles which might lead to a divorce suit, but the amount of alimony was only guessed at. That it would be sizeable was generally believed, but the highest speculation at that time was $50,000 a year.

Papers filed today name the amount as $6500 a month and $10,000 counsel fees.

Since the separation Heye has lived at the Belmont, Forty-second street and Park avenue, while Mrs. Heye and her two children, Mildred, aged 8, and Lawrence, 4, have resided in their beautiful apartment in the Langdon, Fifth avenue and Fifty-sixth street. Heye is said to be worth $2,000,000. He is one of the partners in Battles & Co., bankers, of 60 Broadway.

His father was Gustav Heye, who amassed a fortune in Standard Oil, much of which went to his son. Before her marriage, Mrs. Heye was Miss Blanche A. Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Henry Heard Williams, of 14 East Sixtieth street, New York.

Heye is a collector of Indian relics. Part of his valuable collection he placed in the University of Pennsylvania. During an expedition in the West Indies for the purpose of gathering Indian relics an expensive yacht owned by Heye was lost, though during that expedition the most valuable wooden paddle in existence was found It is of the pre-Columbian period and is one of the most valuable relics in the vast collection owned by Heye.

SOLD ITS JAIL TO GET LIGHT

Kingston, Mo., Needed Lamps More Than It Needed The Calaboose

Kingston, Mo., June 13.—Kingston sold its town calaboose last week. As far back as the oldest inhabitant can remember the old calaboose has been a revered town institution, and it might have remained such for years if the town's funds had held out.

Other towns in Caldwell County were putting in cement crossings, gas systems lighted the main corners of the towns about, so Kingston decided to do likewise.

The other night when the mayor and council met with advisors around the stove in Aq Howard's store, it was discovered that the town's treasury would cease to be a treasury if funds were not obtained. One light on the bank corner, the main one in town, would complete the lighting system. But how to obtain funds? Alky Kearney, town marshall, reported that not a horse, cow or pig had been impounded since the last meeting. Various plans were advanced.

Finally the sale of the calaboose was mentioned. Several claim to be father of the idea. Some of the elders maintained that no town should be without a calaboose. Others argued that it was never used.

Then the city fathers began to talk of when the calaboose was ever used. There was the memory of the time when a citizen from Ray county, "Blackie" they called him, came into the peaceful precincts of Caldwell after imbibing drug store whiskey. He was put in the town jail, but the padlock on the door was rusted and would not lock. The marshall, dead now, got a piece of wire and fastened the door shut by twisting the wire around the bars. In the night the prisoner untwisted the wire and escaped.

Then the body of Tracy, a legless negro desperado, shot to death by a mob, was placed in the calaboose until the arrival of the coroner.

The result of the caucus was the calaboose was condemned and ordered sold. The signs that appeared in the store windows the next morning read:

THE TOWN CALABOOSE will be sold at auction
SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

The Structure contains some heavy oak timbers and two iron cells, very slightly used.

Sold for $44.90

"Uncle Dan" Stubblefield was named as auctioneer, because he was the oldest town sale crier. Quite a crowd attended the sale. After spirited bidding the calaboose was sold to Uncle Bole Brown for $44.90, more than enough to finish the lighting system.

"I can use the cells as a chicken house," 'Uncle Bole' said. — Kansas City Star.

ORDER FAT MEN TO "TRIM" BOAT

New York, June 14.—When the steamship Bermudian groaned its way out of port this afternoon, strict orders had been issued that all of a party of 31 passengers aboard should not congregate on one side of the vessel at the same time. If they did, the weight couldn't be found to balance the boat, for the party of 31 was the New England Fat Men's Club, bound for its annual outing. The fat men are going to Bermuda for a week.

The heaviest man in the party was Frank E. Aldrick, of Northfield, Mass. Not having been feeling very well during the past winter, Aldrich said he weighed slightly less than 400 pounds now, but with a good rest he hoped to get back into shape. He admitted with some chagrin that he weighed only 265 pounds when he joined the club 10 years ago, but gained an average of more than 10 pounds a year.

David Wilkie of Wells River, Vt., said he had also picked up some weight by paying his dues regularly. Five years ago he was a mere lightweight of 265 pounds, but he is nearly up to 300 now. Wilkie was the first president of the club. There are now more than 3000 members in New England, and many who may qualify in years to come. To be admitted applicants must weigh at least 200 pounds.

W. L. Plowman, secretary of the club, apologized for the showing made by the party sailing today. Some of the club members who stayed at home would make them look like a collection of living skeletons, he said.

DESPONDENT LAD HANGS HIMSELF

Boston, June 14.—Despondent because he had received no visitors at the Charles street jail, Harry R. Walton, 19, serving a four months' sentence for forgery, committed suicide Monday afternoon by hanging himself from a pipe in his cell. The facts were not given out until yesterday.

He had watched all day for some visitors from home, and when none came he looped the handkerchief of the navy uniform he had on about his neck and was found dead 15 minutes later.

Walton, who is the son of Randall S. Walton of 20 Gilmore street, Somerville, was wanted in Somerville to answer to the charge of larceny. He had enlisted in the navy, but had exchanged his own suit for a uniform.

At the conclusion of the time for visitors he remarked to Officer Zimmerman of the jail that he alone of all the other prisoners was deserted. The same official found him dead.

GERMAN RULER DESIRES PEACE ON HIS ANNIVERSARY

Quarter Century Reign is Celebrated by Brilliant Fete in Berlin

Berlin, June 86.—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession of Emperor William to the Imperial throne was celebrated to-day in Berlin and throughout the German Empire as a general holiday. The brilliance of the festivities and the enthusiasm displayed by the people testified to the Monarch's great personal popularity among all classes of his subjects.

The commemoration which had been deferred from its actual date out of respect to the memory of the Emperor's father, Frederick, coincides with the forty-second anniversary of the triumphal return of his grandfather with his victorious army was marked by considerable military display. Emphasis, however, also was laid on the peaceful aspects of the Emperor's quarter century reign industrial and civic developments and the material prosperity of the country.

Received British Residents.

To the delegation from the British Church in Berlin received by his majesty the Emperor said: "I can assure you I shall continue to do my best to preserve peace and promote friendly relationships existing between our two countries."

The Emperor responding to an address from the American Peace Societies, headed by Andrew Carnegie, congratulating His Majesty on the completion of his twenty-five years peaceful reign, said:

"I hope we shall have twenty-five years more of peace."

The official Reichbote leads off its special "Jubilee" issue with a glorification of the Emperor's services to the cause of peace.

Bands Awaken Emperor.

The day began with a general reveille. The massed military bands from the division of the guards summoned the Emperor to his window with defeanening music played in the inner court yard of the castle.

WELLAND CANAL REPAIRS SOON COMPLETE--BOATS WAIT

Welland Lock Staff Toiled All Night--Owners of "Porter" to Pay

St. Catharines, Ont., June 16.—After working all night on the break at lock one, the repair staff of the Welland Canal succeeded in getting four new gates in position, but unlike other locks, traffic cannot be resumed until to-night as the small lower level of the new canal cannot be filled until the water is raised in the immense tower level of the old canal in order to support the stone wall which separates the new from the old canal at that point. The feed valves leading into the huge old canal barin have been opened, but there are several square miles of bottom to be covered before trafic can proceed. The flotilla of boats above and below the break must therefore wait until the water in the old level returns to the safety point, which can hardly be reached before 7 p.m.

The damage which is in the neighborhood of $8,000, must be borne by the owner of the steamer Porter. The only damage sustained by the boat was to the bow when it collided with the gates.

TWO ITALIANS GANGSTERS WRECK LOS ANGELES HOUSE

Italians Badly Wounded by Own Explosives Used in Los Angeles

Los Angeles, June 16.—Two Italians who dynamited the residence of a wealthy fruit dealer early to-day were themselves badly injured by the explosives. The house was completely wrecked, but J. D. Trapani and his family, the intended victims, chanced to be away from home.

With their clothing ablaze, the bomb throwers fled but rolled into the mud in the street to extinguish their burning garments and were overtaken.

At a hospital, one of them gave his name as Peffeino Principe. The other refused to talk.

Trapani told the police a story of demands for money on penalty of death, and pursuit which covers a period of eleven years. He came here two years ago from New Orleans.

Object of Attack Nine Years.

According to Trapani, he was the object of mysterious attacks for nearly nine years in New Orleans, and a few weeks after his arrival here his fellow countrymen began sending letters, demanding various sums. These he ignored. Last week, he says, he received what purported to be a final demand for $390. He was told that unless he paid the money to the Black Hand Society, he and his family would be killed. This letter he also ignored.

He asserted his belief that the attempt on his life was planned by an organized society which has headquarters in New Orleans.

The injured men are expected to recover.

ELEPHANT BASEBALL

A Unique Feature of the Coming Barnum & Bailey Circus.

No animal is so itimately and affectionately associated in the popular mind with the circus as the elephant and probably none is more sagacious. Thus, appropriately, the managers of the Barnum & Bailey circus, coming with its acres of tents on next Monday, June 23rd, turned to Harry B. Mooney, trainer of the circus herd of forty beasts, to provide something out of the familiar routine, as a feature of the season.

The result is the only baseball game of its kind ever played and the most convulsively ludicrous one. Three elephants participate—pitcher, batter and gloved and masked catcher. They enter into the sport as keenly enthusiastic as human contestants.

Pilot hits a foul, starts for the first base and returns reluctantly at the umpire's command. He strikes ineffectively and allows three bad balls to pass. Then pitcher and catcher hold a whispered conference over the critical situation. Pilot swats the next ball pitches, drops his bat and is off. First, second and third bases are successfully negotiated, but alas! the catcher awaits him at home, ball in trunk. Pilot makes a brave slide, is called ont, and is led off the field, trumpeting his rage at the decision.

NEW CATHOLIC BODY

Quietly Working Its Way Into Popular Favor Among Roman Catholics in Ireland.

Dublin, June 16.—A new organization known by the name of the Catenia association is quietly working its way into popular favor among Roman Catholics in Great Britain and Ireland. It is essentially a sectarian movement designed to promote materially as well as socially and religiously the interests of its members. In this way it might be regarded somewhat as a species of Freemasonry; but it is understood that its work and activities have the full sanction of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy.

Unlike organizations such as the Hibernians and Foresters it admits men of all nationalities who profess Roman Catholicism, but it prescribes that members must belong to the commercial or professional classes and that they produce credentials of unblemished character before they are even nominated.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Northwest winds; fine and a little cooler.

DEATH OF MR. H. CALCUTT

There has passed away one of Peterborough's oldest and best known citizens, in the person of Mr. Henry Calcutt, at one time owner of Calcutt's brewery and the Calcutt line of steamers. Mr. Calcutt was practically the pioneer in a regular steam boat service between this city and Rice Lake points, via the River Otonabee. This line, in former days, was the connecting link between Peterborough and Cobourg, per the railroad between Harwood and that town. At one time the late Mr. Calcutt owned and once operated that beautiful summer resort, known as Idle Wyld. Mr. Calcutt was born in Cobourg in 1837. His father, the late Mr. James Calcutt, came to Canada in 1830 from Ireland, and settled near Cobourg where he owned and carried on a farm and a distillery. In 1855 the deceased came to Peterborough.

Mr. Calcutt always had an open hand and pocket for the poor. He was always possessed of great enterprise. As an instance of the latter, he once dug a well 400 feet deep in Otonabee in search of salt, on the recommendation of supposed experts. He also built, and operated, a flax mill which ran for some years, until burnt down. He was for three years Reeve of East City, or, as it was then called, Ashburnham.

He leaves to mourn his death, three children, who are the Misses Margaret, and Katherine, living at the Calcutt homestead; 73 Robinson St., East City, and Mrs. R. B. Rogers, 147 Hunter street east; he also leaves seven grand children, viz., Mr. H. G. Logan, Secretary of the Calcutt Brewery and Malting Co., and six children of Mr. R. B. Rogers and Miss Susan Calcutt of this city. The deceased was always an active supporter of St. Luke's church. In politics he was a consistent Conservative. Mr. Calcutt was a member of the Masonic order, and always took a great interest in the fraternity; he was also a member of the Orange Order. In the passing of Mr. Calcutt, who has been of late years invalid, in fact, confined to bed for the past eight or nine years, administered to by loving care of trained nurses and his faithful family, the City of Peterborough loses one of her oldest, best known, best liked and most progressive citizens.

Mr. Calcutt passed away late yesterday afternoon, mourned by all who knew him. Up to going to press the funeral arrangements had not been settled, but will be announced later.

25 YEARS LEPER, BUT ESCAPED ALL SUSPICION

Narragansett Pier, June 16.—Some excitement was caused today by the announcement that William Comber, a resident, was afflicted with leprosy and had been suffering from that disease for 25 years.

He was declared a leper by Dr. Gardner T. Swarts, secretary of the state board of health. Comber recently went from here to New York city.

The case was discovered about 10 days ago when Dr. Clarence E. Gardner, a local physician, called to attend another member of the family. He notified Dr. Swarts, who at once declared Comber to be suffering from a typical case of leprosy.

The man had not been out of the house for about five years, but no other member of the family, Dr. Swarts said, showed any symptoms of the disease.

With the exception of the father, who is proprietor of a small hotel, the family have gone, it is stated, to New York. Dr. Swarts said he has been unable thus far to discover where the leper is now living.

Comber is thought to have contracted the disease in China, where he lived when a child with his parents. His father was a storekeeper in Hongkong and Formosa.

SUFFRAGE DEFEAT LIKELY IN SENATE

Possibly Thirty Votes For Amendment is Predicted—Sixty-four is Needed.

Washington, June 16.—The resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal Constitution under which women would be given the ballot, now awaiting consideration by the Senate is expected to fail. A two-thirds vote is necessary for its adoption.

The chief handicap lies in the opposition of Southern Congressmen. The suffrage movement has made little headway in the south. A bitter struggle is in progress in Alabama, where representative Hobson is seeking the senatorship, as against Mrs. Johnston, on a platform favoring woman suffrage and temperance.

No effort will be made to seriously urge consideration of the subject during the extraordinary session of Congress. It will go over until the regular session next winter.

LONDON BASEBALL PLAYERS WENT FISHING

Recalling the old Biblical story of the seven barley loaves and a few small fishes, without meaning the least disrespect to such a subject, the London Baseball team may take the cake on ball but they don't get the fish.

About half of the team went out fishing yesterday morning. As the sun rose over the Otonabee shore, these representatives of the Royal City, clad in cow-breakfast hats and a few other things, jumped into a boat at Rye's boat house paid their shekels and secured rods, lines and bait. They rowed down to a shady nook on the Otonabee and got busy. Their faces, watching the lines recalled the strike made yesterday by Peggy Swartz, when three men were on bases. As we go to press a wireless message brought latest results of that trip: It was seven slabs, 114 weeds, a tomato can and one dead catfish. Possibly the fishing in the Thames may reward these London players better.

CIRCUS BAND SAID TO HAVE HYPNOTIZED A BIG CONFERENCE

Deserted the Conference When Blare of Music Announced The Parade

Toronto, June 16.—Who would believe that a passing circus band and parade could almost empty a church and stop the solemn, unworldly deliberations of a great Methodist Conference.

Yet that is what happened this morning at the Central Methodist church, when the natural lust of the eye and the ear was excited by the blare of a brass band and the imaginary sights of the days when all were boys and there was nothing so alluring as a circus.

Howe's London Circus with its bands were on parade along Bloor street east, just at the time when Rev. Jas. Allen, Home Mission Secretary, was concluding his report—of underpaid missionaries in the circuits of the Dominion. He was interesting, he was moving and impressive, but he hardly stirred up joy in the hearts of his bearers.

Blare of Brass Band.

Suddenly a blare of brass was heard outside and the street noises, and the tramp, tread, tramp, tread, tramp of myriad feet passing down the street echoed within the auditorium of the church.

Clergymen in their 40's, 50's and 60's began to crane their necks, to turn around restlessly, and to cast longing eyes towards the doors. At last a few ventured to rise and disappeared without. This startled President C. W. Watch, who rose and said:—

"Brethern, it's only a band sounding out joy over the reports we are hearing in this place."

It failed to work, because it was practically a prohibition. But prohibition always increase anxiety to do just what is forbidden.

FORMER TORONTO DRUGGIST WENT ON A SPREE AND DIED

Searching Investigation Will be Held in Regard to His Death

Toronto, June 16.—Charles Marshall, a druggist, formerly in a good position, at one time employed by the T. Eaton Co., died yesterday in the General Hospital. The deceased used to board on Gladstone avenue, and on the morning of June 3rd had been ejected from his boarding-house owing to the prologed drinking bout that he was indulging in.

Marshall was sent to jail on June 5th on remand for one week from the police court for intoxication. At that time Court Jailer Chapman called the attention of the Deputy Governor to a discoloration on the man's head back of his right ear and also a cut on top of the skull which had been attended to and dressed.

In Jail Hospital.

Instead of being placed in a cell, the man was sent to the jail hospital, but no particular attention was paid to him until on June 11th, when his condition became so serious that he was sent to the General Hospital where he died from a depressed fracture of the skull.

An Investigation.

An inquest will be held and a close investigation is promised to ascertain how the man came by his injuries, and what was the cause of the procedure at the jail that allowed the man to remain for a week in a condition that might have been relieved by a speedy operation and which probably would have resulted in saving the man's life.

OTHERWISE ENGAGED.

Kansas will need forty thousand harvest hands this year, but unfortunately most of the harvest hands are in vaudeville.

I SHOT HER SAID CHILD IN GLEE AND FELL ASLEEP

Tragic Touch in Shooting of Mother by Little Four-Year-Old Tot

Collingwood, Ont., June 16.—So many rumors are in circulation respecting the shooting of Mrs. James Calback at her home here on Sunday morning, that Coroner McFaul has decided to hold an inquest, and a jury is being empanelled this morning. They are summoned by five o'clock this afternoon, when they will view the body and afterwards adjourn until Wednesday afternoon.

The circumstances of the shooting which happened at 1 a.m. are such that public opinion is divided as to whether the four-year-old boy, Jimmie did the shooting, or that the gun was accidentally discharged while in the mother's hands.

The Father's Story.

When seen this morning, James Calback, husband of the deceased, stated that the child had been suffering several nights from toothache and shortly after twelve o'clock awoke and became fretful. To quiet him the mother gave him some dishes off the sideboard, and also a small 22 rifle with which it had frequently played. These quieted him so that he stopped crying, and the father returned to his bed in another room, leaving the mother and the child together in the kitchen where the fatality occurred.

Found Her Dead.

Shortly after Mr. Calback and his father, who lives with them, were startled by the report of a rifle and a scream. Both immediately rushed to the kitchen to find the woman lying on the floor dead. The bullet entered her left breast, striking the collarbone and deflecting downward towards the heart, causing almost instant death.

When asked regarding his mamma, the little lad who is but a mere tot, not yet four years old, said with childish glee: "I shot her," evidently not realizing the terrible truth of his words

TOBIAS WILL BE SHOT ON SIGHT--REWARD INCREASED

Woods are Being Raked for Him To-Day, and as He is Armed There Will Be No Waiting When He Is Caught

Sault Ste. Marie, June 16.—With the finding last night of the boat stolen on Friday night from Algonquini on the Michigan side of St. Mary's River, it is now assured that Tobias, the outlaw, who has kept armed posses busy for over a week, has got to Canada, and to-day the woods up the line of the Algoma Central Railway are being raked in an effort to bring him to justice.

It is thought likely that he will be shot on sight, without any effort at his arrest being made, for he is well armed, and will shoot anyone coming in sight. The reward has been increased to $500. His arrest is likely, as the story of the double-murder has spread to the remotest quarters, and everyone is alert. In getting to the Canadian side he must have run big chances of death in the rapids.

8 RULES TO PREVENT MOTORCAR ACCIDENTS

Toronto, June 16.—The eight rules which the children in the schools of Massachusetts are required to memorize for their own safety are given below. The rules were drafted by the officials of the Automobile Legal Association:

Before crossing a street, stop; first look to the left, then to the right, and if safe go ahead.

If playing in a street, remember you have selected the most dangerous place possible, and that public streets are not made to play in.

In playing in the street bear in mind that automobiles come swiftly and silently, and if they strike you are very apt to kill you.

If standing in the middle of the street and automobiles are coming both ways, keep perfectly still.

The danger in stealing a ride is that if you are not thrown off, you are apt to be run over by another vehicle when you jump off.

In case anyone is struck by an automobile, first take the number, but be sure you take it accurately.

If you throw a stone at an automobile you may injure the occupants or cause the driver to lose control; besides it is mean and cowardly. Don't do it.

Always look after a younger child because the younger cannot think quickly and does not know the danger.

This attempt at educating the school children in Massachusetts is along the line adopted by the Ontario Good Roads Commission.

EX-PASTOR BLAMES SIN ON HISTORICAL SLUMMING

Lansing, Mich., June 16.—"Historical Slumming" led the Rev. E. C. Gregory into immorality for which he has just begun a two year term in prison.

As he was going to priron he issued a statement, saying that he had taken up the study of immorality among the ancients for the purpose of writing a book. His statement:

"The danger attending all slumming overtook me and during that time, when my nerves were rent from the abrasion of the horrors of it all, temptation suddenly presented itself and sin crouching at the door, sprang upon me and destroyed me.

"The idea of confessing and steadfastly facing a prison sentence was fixed for me by later chapters of my book, in which it appears that God requires of the Christian man a practically flawless life and in which every departure from the law requires that the offender make a full public confession.

"I have been lashed into prison by the whip of my own honestly stated arguments in the hands of an insatiably cruel conscience."

GOOD HITTING OF THE PETES DEFEATED LONDON NINE

Quite a large crowd of fans turned out yesterday at Riverside Park to witness the first game of the Petes in the series with London. Some new blood was brought into the game in Sallahan and Sullivan and the boys came out victorious. Irwin Trout held up Belding for the Petes, while Matteson held the big mitt for Heck. Both pitchers worked like trojans all through the game, but Heck was very poorly supported in the latter part of the game.

The game started with the visitors scoring two runs in the first innings and one each in the next two, then the Petes tightened up and only allowed London one more in the sixth. The Petes worked hard and in the fourth frame tallied two and in the sixth captured three more, tieing the score 5 all. In the ninth the boys went out in earnest after the game and with two on bases, Callahan made a nice clean hit scoring the winning run.

Trout was there with the old life, and kept the boys on the jump all through the game, and at the same time doing his little bit, having four hits to his credit in four times to bat. Sargent also made good connections with the pill and in the fourth innings landed a long drive to deep centre, bringing in two runs and reaching third himself, but was left on the base. Peggy Swartz also took a crack at the pill as it was passing and it was found somewhere in the long grass in deep centre field, but Peggy being a little stiff after his hard paddle after fish in the early morning, could only reach second on his hit.

Umpire Halligan was laid up yesterday with eye trouble, a member of each team taking his place, but it is hoped that he will be on the job to-day and in good shape. It was said that ever since ladies' day of last week he has been complaining about his eyes, but then, if he had been watching the game, the bright lights would not have bothered him.

PINE TAR CORDIAL

Advertisements under above heads, 20 words and under, one insertion, 15c.; 3 insertions, 25c.; 6 insertions, 40c.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 25c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 386 George St., directly opposite Crossman's store.
